The grave of James Robertson is located in Tuscaloosa County on the Black Warrior River near Sanders' ferry, in the old family burying-ground. He was the famous "Horseshoe Robertson" of Revolutionary fame in South Carolina, and the hero of the novel of that name written by John Pendleton Kennedy in 1835. The name "Horseshoe" was given because of a bend in a creek in his plantation in South Carolina shaped like a horseshoe.

The following inscription is from his tomb:

"MAJOR JAMES ROBERTSON,

A native of S. C.

died April 26, 1838, aged 79 years, and was buried here.

Well known as Horseshoe Robinson, he earned a Just fame in the war of independence, in which he was eminent in courage, patriotism and suffering. He lived fifty-six years with his worthy partner, useful and respected, and died in hopes of a blessed immortality. His children erect this monument as a tribute justly due a good husband, father, neighbor, patriot and soldier."

James Robertson was born in 1759; and his epitaph states that he was a native of South Carolina. He was married in 1782 and "lived fifty-six years with his worthy partner"; she died in January, 1838, and he died April 26, 1838. The name of his wife was Sarah Morris —, which tradition says was Hayden. They left several children. James Robertson was a famous scout during the Revolution and a terror to the Tories. After the war he settled in Pendleton district and was living there when Kennedy met him in 1818. In the preface to Kennedy's Horseshoe Robinson, he gives an account of the circumstances which led him to write the story.

He says that in the winter of 1818-19 he had occasion to visit the western section of South Carolina. He went from Augusta to Edgefield, then to Abbeville and thence to Pendleton, in the old district of Ninety-six, just at the foot of the mountains. His course was still westward until he came to the Seneca River, a tributary of the Savannah. He describes how he happened to spend the night at the home of Col. T—, who lived thirty miles from Pendleton. Horseshoe Robertson came there that night. "What a man I saw! Tall, broad, brawny and erect. His homely dress, his free stride, his face radiant with kindness, the natural gracefulness of his motions, all afforded a ready index to his character. It was evident he was a man to confide in."

The novel Horseshoe Robinson is interesting reading even in this critical and blase twentieth century. Judge A. B. Meek says that "Mr. Kennedy, the author of 'Horseshoe Robinson,' has in that inimitable 'Tale of the Tory Ascendancy' in South Carolina proved the suitability of American subjects for fictitious composition of the most elevated kind. Although in his incidents and characters he has done little more than presented a faithful chronicle of facts, using throughout the veritable names of persons and places as they were stated to him by his hero himself, yet such is the thrilling interest of the story, the vivid pictures of scenery, manners, customs, and language, the striking contrasts of characters and the pervading beauty and power of style and description throughout the work, that we think we do not err in saying that it is not inferior in any respect to the best of the Waverly series."

The home of James Robertson in South Carolina, where he lived for a third of a century, is said to be still standing. It is in Oconee County a few miles from Westminster. It is now owned by a Mr. Cox and travelers frequently visit the place, drawn thither by the fame of Horseshoe Robinson.—Mrs. P. H. Mell, in Alabama Historical Society, Transactions, vol. iv, pp. 560-564.

ROBERTSON, JOHN SOLON, educator and Methodist minister, was born on February 20, 1860, near Louisville, Barbour County; son of Theophilus Ithamar and Martha Jane (Lowe) Robertson, the former, a native of Georgia, who came, at the age of fourteen years, with his parents to Alabama and lived in Tallapoosa, Macon and Barbour Counties, the latter, of English descent, a native of North Carolina, came in 1846 with her parents to Alabama, lived in Russell and Barbour Counties; grandson of Anderson Thomas Jefferson and Elizabeth (Whitehurst) Robertson, the latter of Georgia and of Dutch descent, and of Robert and Mary Harmon (Lynch) Lowe, who lived at, or near, Lynchburg, Va., which was named for Mrs. Lowe's ancestors; great-grandfather, Robertson, with two brothers, immigrated about 1750 to Savannah from England, the life-work of each being teaching, their families having gone originally from Scotland to England. The great-grandfather Lowe was a Methodist minister in early times in North Carolina. Rev. RODDY, PHILLIP DALE, commission merchant and brigadier general, C. S. Army, was born about 1820, in Moulton, Lawrence County, and died in 1897, in London; son of Mrs. Sarah Roddy, of Moulton. He received meager educational advantages owing to the humble circumstances of his parents. For several years he followed the occupation of a tailor. He was elected to the office of sheriff about 1846, and served for three years. He then removed to Chickasaw, in what is now Colbert County and engaged in the steamboat business. At the beginning of the War of Secession, he recruited a company of mounted men and entered the service as its captain. He was complimented on the field for gallantry at the battle of Shiloh where his company served as Bragg's escort; later returned to the Tennessee Valley, increased his command to a regiment, and took a prominent part in heading off the invading army in North Alabama. In December, 1862, he was commissioned colonel of the Fourth Alabama cavalry, and with this force resisted the advance at Little Bear Creek of Col. T. W. Sweeny, who was sent from Corinth to make an expedition as far east as Tusculumbia. A little later he met another raid at Bartons and successfully drove it back. Colonel Roddy's command went to middle Tennessee with General Van Dorn, and on March 28, 1863, it was ordered back to northern Alabama, and Colonel Roddy himself was placed in command of that district. On April 17, 1863, he met Gen. G. M. Dodge's force that had moved up the valley in order to cover and protect the raid of Colonel Streight, and was successful in retarding their progress. Colonel Roddy was commissioned brigadier-general, August 3, 1863, his command being composed of his old regiment, the 5th and 53rd Alabama, Capt. William R. Julian's battalion and Capt. C. B. Ferrill's Georgia battery. With this brigade General Roddy cooperated with General Wheeler in his raid in Tennessee against Rosecrans' communications in October, 1863. He was called, with his command, in February, 1864, to Dalton, Ga., and put in command of a cavalry division, but soon was ordered back to northern Alabama and placed in command of a cavalry division. Here he continued to harass and cripple the enemy. On September 25, 1864, the district of North Alabama was divided into two districts, known as the north and central districts and General Roddy was placed in command of the former. He was of great service to General Hood in keeping his communication open. Removing to Georgia early in 1865, he stopped a federal raid at Newnan, did gallant service with Forrest at Harrisburg, Tishomingo, Athens, Sulphur Trestle and other places and cooperated in the defense of Selma. After the war he engaged in business as a commission merchant in New York city. At the time of his death he was interested in a patent pump and was in England negotiating for the sale of the patent. Married: Margaret A. McGaughey, of Lawrence County. Children: order conjectural, 1. George, private, Co. H, 4th Alabama cavalry regiment, C. S. Army; 2. Philip D., m. Tessa C. Willingham, of Sylvan; 3. Margaret, m. J. R. Burgett; 4. daughter. Last residence: New York.

RODEN, BENJAMIN FRANKLIN, business man, was born January 5, 1844, at DeKalb County, and died in Birmingham, February 23, 1908; son of William B. and Viola (Harrison) Roden, who were natives of Tennessee, but came with their parents to Alabama, before it was a state, the former who engaged in planting, and served in the Seminole War in Florida, the latter who was a second cousin of A. H. H. Harrison of Virginia; grandson of Joseph D. Harrison, who was a representative of the first legislature of the state, and of John B. and Nancy Roden, the former a native of South Carolina who went to Kentucky with Daniel Boone, was an engineer in the War of 1812, and was the first tax collector of Blount County; great-grandson of Jerry Roden, who was an orderly sergeant under Gen. Francis Marion in the Revolutionary War. He was reared upon a farm, and received a common school education in DeKalb County. In August, 1861, at the age of seventeen he enlisted as private in Co. G, Twenty-seventh Alabama infantry, which was subsequently formed into the Thirty-first regiment. In January, 1863, he was sent to Nashville, and in the same year was promoted to second sergeant, on February 1 he was appointed assistant commissary of the regiment and on March 1, 1862, was appointed orderly on the staff of Gen. John C. Breckinridge. He was severely wounded in the battle of Shiloh, was taken prisoner two days later, and after being held for eight days was recaptured by Col. N. B. Forrest, afterward Gen. Forrest, and sent to Corinth, Miss., and later to Mobile, where he remained six months and then returned home. At the end of a year, he was assigned to the tax department, which position he held until December, 1864, when he was assigned to secret service duty. He surrendered on June 6, 1865. After the war he went to Texas, and attended the McKenzie college, for over two years, and was teacher in the Choctaw Nation, Indian Territory, for two years. He then went to Gadsden, where he entered the mercantile business, under the name of Latham and Roden, and he remained there for four years. In 1871, he came to Birmingham, where he spent the remainder of his life. He assisted in building up the business portion of the town, and one of the business blocks in the city bears his name. He was the founder and the president of the Avondale land company; was one of the founders of the Birmingham gas and electric light company of which he was vice-president, general manager and treasurer; was one of the founders of the Birmingham chain works; was president of the Birmingham insurance company; was one of the directors of the Alabama national bank; served as alderman for ten years, and was the founder and the president of the first street railroad. He was a Democrat, and a Methodist. Married: in Marion, November 29, 1872, to Ella Lee, daughter of James and Dorcas C. (Dorroh) Didlake of that place, the former who was a Virginian; granddaughter of John and Jane (Cunningham) Dorroh, of Laurens District, S. C. Children: 1. Viola Harrison, m. George E. Redin, Paris, France; 2. Florence, m. Charles G. Davis, Silver Plume, Col.; 3. Lillian, m. A. J. Bowron, Birmingham; 4. Benjamin Franklin, m. Elizabeth Bowman, Marvel; 5. Maibelle, m. Isaac Croom Beatty, Birmingham. Last residence: Birmingham.

RODEN, JOHN B., stationer, was born July 28, 1848, in DeKalb County; son of William and Viola (Harrison) Roden, and a brother of B. F. Roden (q. v.). He was educated in the common schools of Blount and DeKalb Counties; entered the grocery business in 1868 at Gadsden; lived subsequently in Atlanta, Hot Springs, Ark., and Texas; and in 1873 located in Birmingham where he has since resided. His business interests and connections in the last named field were varied. He was proprietor of a chain of music stores in Birmingham, Gadsden and other towns, and had an interest in the Avondale land company, and in the Birmingham gas and illuminating company. He was a Knight of Pythias; and a Presbyterian. Married: April 13, 1879, to Cora J. Gilliam, of Perry County. Residence: Birmingham.

RODES, ROBERT EMMET, major-general, C. S. Army, was born March 29, 1829, near Liberty, Bedford County, Va., and died September 19, 1864, at Winchester, Va.; son of David and Martha (Yancey) Rodes, the former who was always known as Gen. Rodes, was born in Albemarle County, lived in Lynchburg, was clerk of the court many years, and died in 1862; grandson of Matthew and Mary (Mills) Rodes, the former who was born about 1833 and died in 1893, and of Robert Yancey and his wife who was a Miss Harrison, the former who lived in Lynchburg; great-grandson of David Rodes. Robert Emmet Rodes obtained his early education in the schools of Lynchburg; attended the Virginia military institute, from which he was graduated July 4, 1848; following this was assistant professor in the institute for two years; was assistant engineer for the Southside railroad until 1854; then went to Marshall, Tenn., where he engaged in railroad construction; came to Tuscaloosa, in April, 1855, and joined the corps who were working on what is now the Alabama great southern. This work disbanded in the fall of 1855; went to North Carolina where he engaged in engineering; thence to Missouri; when work in Alabama was resumed he returned; in November, 1857, he was elected chief engineer of the lower portion of the N. W. and S. W. railroad from Jefferson to Meridian, Miss.; held this position until 1861, and left because of military duties. In January, 1861, he was captain of the "Warrior Guards;" led the company to Ft. Morgan, remaining there until February when it returned to Tuscaloosa; when Ft. Sumter fell, Capt. Rodes offered the service of the company to the governor of Alabama; early in May he was ordered to report at Montgomery with his company; on May 5, at Montgomery the Fifth Alabama was organized, Capt. Rodes being elected colonel of his company. The regiment reported to Gen. Bragg at Pensacola; a few weeks later went to Richmond and took a position near Manassas Junction in Gen. Ewell's brigade; the brigade was not actively engaged in the first battle of Manassas. On October 21, 1861, Col. Rodes was commissioned brigadier-general and assigned to the brigade composed of the Fifth, Sixth Twelfth Alabama, the Twelfth Mississippi regiment and the King William, Virginia, Artillery; led this brigade at Williamsburg and at Seven Pines, May 31, 1862; in the latter battle he received a severe wound and was compelled to turn over his command to Col. Gordon. Not long after the battle of Seven Pines the Twelfth Mississippi was detached from the brigade and the Third and Twenty-sixth Alabama were added to it. With his wound still unhealed Gen. Rodes led his brigade of 1,460 men at Haines' Mill, June 27, but near the close of the day because of the condition of his arm and the consequent sickness, he was again compelled to turn over his command to Col. Gordon. Gen. Rodes was in the Maryland campaign, at the Battles of Chancellorsville, Gettysburg, the Wilderness, Spottsylvania and the second Cold Harbor; when Early retired from Maryland, Gen. Rodes repulsed the foe at Castleman's Ferry, and Kernstown; and it was at Winchester, September 19, 1864, that he was struck behind the ear by a fragment of a shell and died within a few hours. Married: September 10, 1857, in Tuscaloosa, to Virginia Hortense, daughter of David and Eliza Antoinette (Bell) Woodruff (q. v.); the former who was a prominent bookseller in Tuscaloosa, and was born September 29, 1798, in Connecticut and the latter who was born April 30, 1811, in Norfolk, Va., lived near Winchester some years; moved to Shelbyville, Tenn.; went to Tuscaloosa in 1827 or 1828 to take charge of a female institute; was married October 29, 1829; d. December 18, 1884. Her ancestors came from England in 1620 and the homestead built in 1640 by Matthew Woodruff, her great-great-great-grandfather was, until its destruction by fire, a notable landmark in Connecticut. Children: 1. Robert Emmet, b. September 30, 1863, m. March 21, 1896, to Birdie L. McKinnis; 2. Bell Yancey, b. January 11, 1865, m. R. J. Treanor, in June, 1884. Last residence: Winchester, Va.

RODGERS, JAMES, soldier of the American Revolution, aged 80, resided in Pickens County, June 1, 1840.—Census of Pensioners, 1841, p. 149.

RODGERS, THOMAS A., member of the constitutional convention of 1819, from Shelby County; elected secretary of State by the legislature, 1819. Died September 28, 1821.

ROGAN, JAMES, probate judge and representative from St. Clair County, 1838, was born in Botetourt County, Va.; son of Daniel and Catherine (Crawford) Rogan, the former a native of Belfast, Ireland, and migrated to America, landing in Baltimore, Md., August 25, 1791, when twenty years of age, and who brought with him a large and valuable library. He lived at Kingsport, Sullivan County, Tenn., to which point he moved with his parents in early life and where he was married. With his wife and two children he moved to Gunter's landing, Jackson County, in the spring of 1826, going from thence in 1830 to Ashville, St. Clair County, where he was conspicuous in fraternizing with and civilizing the Indians, becoming intimate with a number of the Indian chiefs. He served as probate judge and representative in the State legislature, 1838. He, with his family, moved from Ashville to Ripley, Tippah County, Miss., where he was probate judge for twenty-five years. Five of his sons served in the Confederate Army, three of whom, Richard Cornelius, John Netherland and Leonidas were killed in battle. He was a prominent elder in the Presbyterian church for forty years. Author: numerous unpublished poems and historical sketches are preserved by his descendants. Married: Sarah, daughter of Richard and Margaret (Woods) Netherland, of Powhatan, Va.; sister of Col. John Netherland, one of Tennessee's greatest jury lawyers, who in 1833 served as a member of the Tennessee State senate; in 1848 he was an elector from the State-at-large; represented Hawkins County in the Tennessee legislature, 1851; was defeated by Isham G. Harris for governor of that State following a heated campaign. Children: there were several children, among whom were the three sons who were killed during the War of Secession and La Fayette Rogan (q. v.). Last residence: Ripley, Miss.

ROGAN, LA FAYETTE, farmer and merchant, was born January 21, 1831, at Ashville, St. Clair County, and died November 12, 1906, at Birmingham; son of James and Sarah (Netherland) Rogan (q. v.). He was educated in the public schools of Ripley, Miss., and became a merchant and farmer at that place. In 1887 he located in Birmingham, and merchandised there until 1901. He enlisted in Co. B, 44th Mississippi infantry regiment, C. S. Army in 1861, and was later quartermaster for Walthall's brigade, Bragg's army; was captured at Missionary Ridge and imprisoned at Rock Island, Ill., until the close of the war. He was a Democrat and was a member of the county and district committees of his party in Tippah County. He entertained a deep interest in education and owing to this fact the Lafayette Rogan school for boys, at Ripley, was named in his honor. He was a Methodist; and a Knight of Honor. Married: October 13, 1858, at Ripley, Miss., to Ellen Jane, daughter of Daniel and Sarah Lenoir (Thurmond) Hunt of that place, the former probate judge of Tippah County, Miss.; maternal granddaughter of Sarah Gwyn, niece of Gen. William Lenoir, a French officer of Revolutionary fame; great-granddaughter of James and Amelia Gwyn; great-great-granddaughter of Col. Hugh Gwyn who emigrated from Wales and landed at Jamestown, Va., 1610. The year following while exploring the coast of Chesapeake Bay stopped at a small island and while there he saved Pocohontas from drowning, for which act Powhatan gave him the island and named it Gwyn's Island. Both the Gwyn and Lenoir families display armorial bearings. Children: 1. Daniel Hunt, unkm., San Diego, Calif.; 2. Sue, m. Charles Fredrick Markell, Birmingham; 3. Mary, m. Frank Goodbar Jones, Aberdeen, Wash.; 4 and 5. Sarah Thurmond and Kate Hunt, twins, the former the wife of Lieut. Gov. Nathan L. Miller (q. v.), the latter unmarried and resides in San Diego, Calif.; 6. Nat, m. ROGERS, CHARLES PLATT, sr., civil engineer and planter, was born August 8, 1832, at Petersburg, Va.; son of Charles and Carolina (Adone) Rogers, the former was born at Poughkeepsie, N. Y., and later removed to Petersburg, Va., and still later to Apalachicola, Fla., resided in Columbus, Ga., in the summer, and Apalachicola in the winter, was a cotton factor and business agent for Baring brothers and Dennistown and co. of London and Liverpool; grandson of Charles Platt and Caroline Rogers, the former a civil engineer and afterwards one of the leading merchants of New York city, and of Peter Estave and Catherine Adone; great-grandson of James and Elizabeth (Platt) Rogers, the latter a sister of Col. Charles C. Platt, an aide-de-camp of Washington, and a colonel in the Revolutionary Army; great-great-grandson of Epiphiah Platt, who was a prisoner of war on the British prison ship in New York harbor. The maternal ancestors of Senator Rogers came from Huntington, England, and settled on Long Island before the American Revolution, naming their seat "Huntington." His maternal ancestors came from France and lived in Williamsburg, Va., during the colonial period. They were ardent Whigs and suffered many hardships from the British during the Revolutionary War. They all afterwards lived in Petersburg, Va., and are buried in old Blandford cemetery. Senator Rogers was educated in the common schools at Petersburg; and prepared for college by B. F. Shine, a celebrated educator. He entered Princeton college but left without graduation to enter an engineering corps. He began his career as civil engineer in 1852 on the Columbus branch of the Montgomery and West Point railroad. He served for seven years as resident engineer for the Montgomery and Mobile railroad and the resident engineer for the South and North railroad, and as chief engineer of the road from Opelika to Lafayette. He has also done engineering work on a number of railroads in Alabama, North Carolina, Georgia, Florida and Louisiana. On January 9, 1861, prior to the seceding of the State of Alabama, Senator Rogers, as a private in the "Montgomery True Blues" went with the 2nd Alabama volunteer regiment, Alabama volunteer corps, to Pensacola, where he performed a short tour of service. Later he entered as a private in Company H, 37th Alabama infantry regiment, 1862, under Col. James F. Dowdell. He was promoted to captain and assistant quartermaster in 1863 and served with that command through all the campaign until the end in 1865. Although not in any sense a politician, Senator Rogers has served his county in many capacities. He was a representative from Lowndes County 1886-87, 1888-89, 1892-93, 1894-95, 1900-01, and senator from Lowndes and Autauga Counties 1902 and 1903. He served as a member of the constitutional convention in 1901. He was again elected to the senate of 1911. He is a Democrat, and has served with distinction in the councils of his party. He is an Episcopalian and a Mason. Married: (1) August 23, 1857, at Hayneville, to Mary A. C., daughter of E. ROQUEMORE, C. HUNTER, lawyer. Residence: Montgomery.

ROQUEMORE, JOHN DUPREE, business man, lawyer and State senator, was born August 27, 1846, in Barbour County, and died in Montgomery, March 12, 1900; son of Zachariah and Julia Ann (McGibony) Roquemore, natives of Georgia who migrated to Alabama in 1836, settling in Russell County, but later removing to Barbour County where he became an extensive planter. His early education was received in the country schools of Barbour County and in the town of Eufaula. He entered the University of Alabama in 1862 but did not complete his course owing to his entrance into the Confederate Army, as a member "Nelson's Rangers," a company which was assigned to duty as escort to Gen. Stephen D. Lee, in which service he continued until the close of hostilities. Returning home he began the study of law and in May, 1867, at Clanton was admitted to the bar. He at once opened an office at Eufaula, where he entered upon the practice. He was appointed in 1876, when he had been less than ten years at the bar, as one of the commissioners to revise and codify the statutes of the State, succeeding Fern Manly Wood who died in office. In 1878 he entered the State senate from Barbour County and in the session of 1880 was elected as president of the senate to succeed Hon. William G. Little, deceased. In 1886 he formed a partnership with Hon. J. M. White of Clanton, and together they removed to Montgomery and began the practice under the firm name of Roquemore, White and Long, Mr. Long remaining in Eufaula. Later S. H. Dent, jr., was taken into the firm in the place of Mr. Long, deceased, and the firm became Roquemore, White and Dent. He was for a number of years attorney of the Central railroad and banking company of Georgia. In several cases for that company brought by him to the supreme court of Alabama, principles important to the jurisprudence of Alabama were first settled, notable cases in point being the Central R. R. and B. Co. vs. Carr, 76 Ala. 389, and Central R. R. and B. Co. vs. Smith, 76 Ala. 576. Attracted by the enlarged business opportunities of North Alabama, he went to Decatur, in 1887, where his firm opened a branch law office. In this new field he soon became identified with many of the most important business enterprises, being vice-president and counsel of the Exchange bank; director of the Decatur land improvement and furnace company; president and counsel of the water works company. The demands of his practice increasing, he returned to Montgomery, where he continued in the law until his death. His last association was with his son under the name of John D. and C. H. Roquemore. He was a Baptist; a Knight

Templar; Mason; and a Knight of Pythias. Married: (1) January 28, 1867, in Eufaula, to Mary Linguard, daughter of James Linguard and Sarah Elizabeth (Shorter) Hunter; granddaughter of Gen. ROREX, JAMES K. P., physician and surgeon, was born March 3, 1845, at Fayetteville, Tenn.; son of David and Sarah A. (Wilkinson) Rorex, the former a native of East Tennessee who removed to Alabama in January, 1858, locating in Scottsboro, where he became a merchant. Dr. Rorex received a common school education. He left school at the age of fifteen to enter the Confederate service, joining the 6th Alabama infantry regiment. He was in the seven days' fighting around Richmond; was wounded at the battle of Chancellorsville, in the battle of Gettysburg, and again at the second battle of the Wilderness. He attended school at Stevenson for one year after the war; was a student at the University of Virginia; taught three years at home, at the same time studying medicine; attended two courses of lectures in Nashville; graduated M. D., from medical college at Mobile, in March, 1875; and attended Louisiana State medical college, New Orleans, in 1884. He has practiced medicine in Scottsboro since 1875. He is a member of the State and County medical associations; Christian church; and an Odd Fellow. Married: November 6, 1876, to Ella Lou, daughter of William Whitworth of Tennessee. Children: 1. Louis Wyeth; 2. Fannie Polk; 3. William David. Residence: Scottsboro.

ROSAMOND, WILLIAM LUCIUS, physician; graduate of the Kentucky school of medicine, 1891; licensed to practice by the county board of Walker. Married: Ozella Appling of Jasper. Residence: Birmingham.

ROSE, HOWELL, lawyer member first session, Alabama legislature, was born in North Carolina, about 1791, and died in Elmore County in 1868. No facts have been preserved of his early life, of his ancestry or his family connection, apart from the fact that his parents were in humble circumstances, and in his childhood moved to Putnam County, Ga., where he grew to manhood. Owing to the poverty of his parents he received only a limited education. On attaining his majority he became an overseer on a plantation, which in a rural community at the time, was considered a remunerative occupation. He not long afterwards became a planter and merchant in Eatonton, and removed to Alabama about 1816 opening a plantation in the present Autauga County about three miles west of Wetumpka. His great energy and sound common sense soon made him a marked man in his community, and he was elected a senator to the first legislature of the State, which convened in Huntsville in 1819. For twenty years thereafter, Col. Rose, as he was thenceforth called, devoted his energies to the increase of his private fortune, and apart from his possessions in Autauga and Lowndes Counties, became an extensive land owner in Coosa County, which then embraced much of the present Elmore County. He became a citizen of the latter county in 1834, settling a few miles from Wetumpka. From 1843 to 1847 he represented Coosa County in the general assembly. In 1846, the absorbing question being the removal of the capital of the State from Tuscaloosa, Col. Rose was a warm advocate of Wetumpka as the most eligible location, opposing the claims of Tuscaloosa and Montgomery. Many ballottings took place, combinations were formed, but through all Col. Rose stood firmly by Wetumpka until the final decision was given in favor of Montgomery. He was a Democrat of the Jackson school and was opposed to secession, but quietly yielded to the decision of his State. The great pecuniary losses resulting from the war and its disastrous termination wrought heavily upon the mind of Col. Rose and no doubt hastened his death. Married: in Putnam County, Ga., to a Miss Bryant. There were no children born of this union. Last residence: Wetumpka.

ROSE, THADDEUS, L., business man, was born January 14, 1855, in Yazoo County, Miss.; son of E. D. L. and Jane (Hyatt) Rose, the former who was a native of Virginia, graduated from Yale, moved to Macon, Ga., to Yazoo City, Miss., and then to Selma, served in the C. S. Army, and after the war moved to Washington, where he died, and the latter who was of English descent. After the death of his father, the family removed to State Line, Miss., where Mr. Rose accepted a position in the railroad office of the Mobile and Ohio railroad, and at the age of fourteen years was in sole charge of the office. He was then moved to Mobile, where he remained until 1880, when after a short stay in Montgomery, he was stationed at Georgiana, where he has been agent of the Louisville and Nashville railroad, and has had charge of the railroad interests and cotton yard. He has studied law, and his health failing, lectured for one year in the southern states on educational topics. In March, 1891, he went to Europe, Egypt and the Holy Land, and after returning to this country lectured in different places on the experiences of his trip. He is a member of the Baptist church, and has never married. Residence: Georgiana.

ROUNTREE, JENNIE MAUDE (McIVER), past president, Alabama division, United Daughters of the Confederacy, club woman and poet, was born October 22, 1875, at Wichita, Kan.; daughter of John Shelby and Selene (Edmundson) McIver, the former a native of Nashville, Tenn., member Co. B, 8th Texas cavalry regiment, C. S. Army, entered the service when sixteen years of age, served three years and was wounded twice; granddaughter of John King Edmundson of Nashville, Tenn., and John and Jane Robertson (Martin) McIver. The McIvers were seated at "Gress," Stonnaway, Scotland, and were one of the seven original clans of that country. The family was of Norse and Celtic origin. The first American ancestor, John McIver, with his brother, Colin, settled in 1791 at Alexandria, Va., where the latter died and received a Masonic burial. John married Margaret Cooper, the paternal great-grandparents of Mrs. Rountree. Among her Revolutionary ancestors she reckons, through the Martin line, General Sumner, Maj. Elisha Battle, and Maj. Henry Horn. Through her maternal line she is descended from Andrew Greer, I, who came to America in 1750, from Gaughvaugher, Ireland, and settled in the vicinity of Philadelphia, Pa., thence removing to Staunton, Va., and later to North Carolina and East Tennessee, a Revolutionary soldier under Capt. James Robertson, and Colonel Preston, and his memory is perpetuated with other Revolutionary soldiers by a monument erected in Nashville, Tenn. Mrs. Rountree was educated in private schools in Nashville, and under Miss Julia Tutwiler, at Livingston. She has since reaching maturity evinced a deep interest in civic, patriotic, literary and philanthropic movements. She organized the Writer's club of Birmingham, and was its president during 1907-09, inclusive, and 1915-16; vice-president Woman's national press association, 1908-11, inclusive; literary editor "Dixie Home Magazine," published in Birmingham, 1913-16; treasurer, League of Southern writers, 1912; charter member, Alabama Daughters of the Confederacy, organized in 1897; charter member and later president, Pelham chapter United Daughters Confederacy, during whose administration the Confederate monument was erected in Capitol Park, Birmingham; editor, recorder of crosses of honor, State vice-president and president, United Daughters Confederacy, holding the latter office, 1917-18; regent for Alabama of the Confederate museum, Richmond, Va., since 1914, during which time the State's endowment fund has been brought from one hundred dollars to over two thousand dollars and many valuable relics added to this museum. Through her efforts the state and national organizations of the United Daughters Confederacy agreed that all war relief work undertaken by the Daughters of the Confederacy should be under the direction and supervision of the American Red Cross. She was general chairman of the war relief work of the United Daughters of the Confederacy during the period of the European War, and had supervision of all war work done by members throughout the thirty-five states in which the organization is active. The results showed twenty-five million dollars expended by the organization in war relief work, besides the endowment of seven wards in the American Red Cross hospital, Neuilly, France. She organized Red Cross chapters at Tuscaloosa, Demopolis, Jasper and Oneonta, and fifty-five branches and auxiliaries. She was a member of the official four minute speakers bureau, organized by the government, for the period of the war. She designed the permanent badge of the Alabama United Daughters of the Confederacy, and the World War United Daughters of the Confederacy relief gold pin. She is a Democrat and Episcopalian. RYAN, ABRAM JOSEPH, poet, Roman Catholic priest, was born August 15, 1839, at Norfolk, Va., and died April 22, 1886, at Louisville, Ky. He was of Irish ancestry. When he was seven or eight years of age, he moved with his parents to St. Louis, where he received training under the brothers of the Christian schools. Having obtained the necessary preparatory work, he entered the ecclesiastical seminary, at Niagara, N. Y., and was ordained a Roman Catholic priest, at St. Louis, soon after he became of age, in 1861. He served as chaplain in the C. S. Army, throughout the War of Secession, and during this period published a number of lyric poems, written under the nom de plume of "Moina." At the close of the war, he was stationed at Nashville, afterwards, at Clarksville, Tenn., and then at Augusta, Ga., where he founded the "Banner of the South," which paper he published for about five years. In 1870, he was stationed at the Cathedral at Mobile, and in 1877, became the pastor of St. Mary's church in the suburbs of Mobile. In 1878, during the yellow fever epidemic, he was one of the most able and dependable workers. Up to this time his poems had been published in newspapers and magazines, but on the suggestion of a friend, they were gathered into book form and published at the "Mobile Register." In December, 1880, he went north to Baltimore to have his poems published and to go on a lecture tour. His poems were published, as "Poems, Patriotic, Religious, and Miscellaneous," in December, 1880. His lecture tour proved to be a failure and he returned to the south. His death occurred in a Franciscan monastery, in Louisville, Ky., in 1886. A bronze monument, a memorial to Father Ryan, "the poet-priest of the Confederacy," was erected by the people of Mobile, and unveiled in that city, July 13, 1913. He was author of the following poems: "The Conquered Banner," "The Lost Cause," "The Sword of Robert E. Lee," "The Flag of Erin," an epic, "Their Story Runneth Thus," "Song of the Mystic," "In Memory of the Very Rev. J. B. Etienne," "After the Sickness at Milan," "March of the Deathless Dead," "Sentinel Songs," "C. S. A.," "Sea Dreamings," "St. Mary's"; "Nocturne"; and an ode to his beloved brother, Capt. David J. Ryan, a confederate soldier, who was killed in battle. He was writing a "Life of Christ," at the time of his death. Last residence: Louisville, Ky.

SAFFOLD, REUBEN, lawyer and chief justice Alabama supreme court, was born September 4, 1788, in Wilkes County, Ga., and died in Dallas County; son of Reuben and Sarah (Lynde) Saffold, the former an early settler of Wilkes County, a planter, minute man in the Revolutionary Army, and later received a grant of two hundred and fifty acres of land in Washington County, Ga., in gratitude for his services; nephew of William Saffold, also a Georgia Revolutionary soldier, and of Elizabeth Saffold, who married James Fannin, and was probably the grandmother of Col. James W. Fannin, whose life was sacrificed in the struggle for Texas' independence. Family tradition claims that the original ancestor in America, was brought secretly, in infancy, to Charleston, S. C., to prevent his inheritance of valuable property in England. The name Saffold, seems to have originated in Saxony, Germany. Judge Saffold received his academic education in his native county, taught school and read law in the office of Maj. Edward Payne, Watkinsville, Morgan County, Ga., and temporarily located at that place after being licensed to practice. In June, 1813, he removed to Jackson, Clarke County, Miss. Ter., conducted thence by Gen. Sam Dale, the picturesque frontier guide and Indian fighter. Here he resumed the practice of his profession, which was shortly interrupted by his engagement in the war with the Creek Indians. He was in the battle of Burnt Corn, commanded a company in service along the Perdido river, and had an appointment as colonel in the militia of Mississippi Territory. After the establishment of peace he resumed the practice of his profession. He was a member, from Clarke County, of the legislature of Mississippi Territory and of the convention, 1819, in Huntsville, which framed the first Constitution for the State of Alabama, and was elected as judge of a second circuit court, thereby being ex-officio a member of the state supreme court. In 1832, when a separate court of last resort was organized, he was chosen as one of the three members of the supreme court, the chief justice of the court having resigned, he was appointed, 1835, to the position made vacant, but resigned the following year. In 1819 he removed to Dallas County, Cahaba being the state capital, but upon resigning as chief justice, removed to Mobile. After the expiration of a few years he returned to "Belvoir," his former home, a few miles northward from Pleasant Hill, and here resumed the practice of law, having an office on his own grounds. In 1843, Governor Fitzpatrick tendered him the position of associate justice of the supreme court, but he declined the honor. Col. Albert James Pickett, author of the state's early history, said of Judge Saffold: "The reports of the supreme court of Alabama are enduring memorials of his strength of mind, patient investigation, deep research and profound learning." Married: April 1, 1811, in Morgan County, Ga., Mary, daughter of Col. Joseph and Jane (Walker) Phillips, who lived in Morgan County, Ga.; granddaughter of Joseph Phillips, a minute man in the Revolutionary command of Col. Elijah Clarke, in Georgia, and who received, in 1785, from the State of Georgia, a grant of 550 acres of land in Washington County, for his services. At the time of the massacre at Fort Mims, August 30, 1813, Mrs. Saffold was in a neighboring fort, and heard the firing at the former place. She was a member of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, and is buried at "Belvoir." Children: 1. Joseph Phillips (q. v.); 2. William Bird, lawyer, unmarried, Hayneville; 3. Addison Jackson (q. v.); 4. Jane Elizabeth, m. Dr. James Berney (q. v.); 5. Mary Anne, m. Col. J. M. Bolling (q. v.); 6. Army, was born March 13, 1840, in Tuscaloosa, killed August 21, 1864, at the battle of Petersburg, Va., and is buried in Richmond; son of Dr. Charles Peake and Elizabeth Ann (Thomson) Sanders, the former a native of Charleston, S. C., who removed to Alabama locating in Tuscaloosa, later settling at Clinton, Greene County, practicing the profession of medicine with success in these places; grandson of William and Martha (Ditmire) Sanders, of Anderson, S. C., and of Mathew and Arrabelle (Keys) Thomson, of Anderson, S. C., later of Tuscaloosa County. He entered the University of Alabama in 1858, leaving in his senior year to enter the C. S. Army, but receiving the A. B. degree from this institution. He was detailed to drill a company at Clinton, returned to the university and after a few weeks was unanimously elected captain of this same company which was known as Co. B, 11th Alabama infantry regiment. He led his company at Seven Pines, Gaines' Mill and Frazier's Farm. In the last named battle he was severely wounded by a fragment of shell, which tore the deeper tissues of his leg, but notwithstanding this wound he remained on the field until after dark. He rejoined and took command of his regiment on August 11, 1862. At the battle of Sharpsburg he was again wounded by pebbles thrown up by a cannon ball striking him in the face. He was commissioned colonel upon the return of the army to Virginia. He was under fire at Fredericksburg; was conspicuous for gallantry at Salem church during the Chancellorsville campaign; and was wounded in the knee by a minie ball at Gettysburg. During the winter of 1863-64 he was president of the division court martial. At the Wilderness, May, 1864, he led his regiment and in the famous charge at Spottsylvania, after the fall of General Perrin, he led the brigade. He was made brigadier general, May 31, 1864, for gallantry on this occasion and his command consisted of the 8th, 9th, 10th, 11th and 14th Alabama regiments. This brigade fought June 22, 23, 25, 29 in the battles around Petersburg. On August 16, 1864, at Deep Bottom, he commanded his own and a North Carolina brigade. General Sanders fell on August 21, 1864, while advancing on foot along the Weldon railroad, a minie ball having passed through both of his thighs, severing the femoral arteries. He expired a few minutes later after having been removed a short distance by his adjutant, Captain Clarke. He was unmarried. Last residence: Clinton.

SANFORD, HENRY C., member Alabama legislature, and the Secession and constitutional conventions of 1861 and 1865, was born May 20, 1808, in Greenville District, S. C., and died May 28, 1888, in Cherokee County. He was the son of Hezekiah P. and Priscilla (Chambers) Sanford, a soldier in the War of 1812, grandson of Thomas P. Sanford, and wife, a Miss Rutledge, the former a Revolutionary soldier, and of Philip Chambers, and wife, a Miss Suggs. He attended school only ten months, but having a vigorous mind instructed himself and in time became proficient in arithmetic and algebra and acquired a fair scholarship in Greek and Latin. He also read law but with no intention of entering the practice. About 1832 he went to East Tennessee where he remained for some time, then removed to Turkeytown, Cherokee County, where he merchandised. He next moved to Gaylesville, but after a short stay, he returned to East Tennessee where he lived ten years, engaged in teaching school. During these years he also became a Methodist minister. His last move was back to Cherokee County, which he represented in the legislature, 1853-1857. He was a member of the Secession convention, 1861, and was opposed to the State's withdrawal from the Union. He was also a member of the constitutional convention of 1865. SANFORD, JAMES BRAXTON, lawyer and legislator, was born November 12, 1870, in Talladega County; son of James Braxton and Lula (Moberly) Sanford, the former was a native of Meriwether County, Ga., and during the latter part of the War of Secession was a surgeon; grandson of Charles and Polly (Scott) Sanford, and Ichabod and Mary Moberly, of Talladega County. He was educated in the schools of Sylacauga, and was two years at Howard college. In 1896 he was admitted to the bar in Talladega; was a member of the city council of Sylacauga, 1902-04, and was one of the representatives in the legislature of 1907, from Talladega County. He is a Democrat; Baptist; Mason; and Knight of Pythias. Married: February 26, 1896, to Pollie L., daughter of Ephraim and Lucy (Gooden) Ledbetter, of Sycamore. Children: 1. Ruth; 2. Zula B. Residence: Sylacauga.

SANFORD, JOHN WILLIAM AUGUSTINE, colonel 60th Alabama infantry regiment, C. S. Army, attorney general of Alabama, lawyer, clerk of State supreme court, was born November 3, 1825, in Milledgeville, Ga., and died August 7, 1913, in Montgomery; son of John William Augustine and Marianne Ridley (Blount) Sanford, of Milledgeville, Ga., the former was born about 1798 in Hancock County, where he received his early education, afterwards completed a course of instruction in Yale college, was aide-de-camp to General Floyd in the celebrated controversy between that officer and President Adams in 1827, in 1832 was elected major-general by the legislature of Georgia, and as such commanded the Georgia troops in the Creek War of 1836, prior to this war had been elected a member of the Federal congress but resigned without taking his seat, at the earnest request of President Andrew Jackson, in order that he might serve the government as certifying agent of the sale of the Creek lands, was afterwards secretary of state of Georgia, in 1861 was the commissioner of Georgia to Alabama and Texas, relative to the secession of these states, at the commencement of the war resigned his office of major-general, volunteered as a private in the "Baldwin Blues" which formed a part of the 4th Georgia infantry regiment, and went with that organization to Virginia, was offered the command of the regiment but declined it, saying that in such a war the station of a private was the post of honor, but as he was well known to many of the officers of the army, on the arrival of the regiment at Norfolk he was made aide-de-camp to Major-General Huger; grandson of Captain Jesse and Martha Goodwyn (Mitchell) Sanford, the former a civil engineer by profession, and an officer in the Revolutionary Army under Washington. After the revolution he emigrated with his family to Hancock County, Ga., and of Col. Richard Augustus Blount of Southhampton, Va.; great-grandson of William and Rachel (Medford) Sanford, of Loudoun County, Va., and of John Mitchell, also of Virginia. John William Augustine Sanford, jr., received his early education in the schools of Milledgeville and in Midway, near that city. He then attended Oglethorpe university, from which he was graduated November 13, 1844, with the degree of B. A. In July, 1851, he was graduated from Harvard university with the degree of B. L. and in July, 1878, received from the University of Alabama, the degree of LL. D. He was admitted to the bar, October 19, 1852, and located, for the practice of his profession, in Montgomery, which was thenceforth his home. He built up a lucrative practice in Montgomery and in the adjoining counties, in the Federal courts and in the supreme court of Alabama. In 1856 he was an elector on the Buchanan and Breckenridge ticket and as such he thoroughly canvassed the third congressional ticket. A States Rights Democrat of the strictest sect, four years later, he used every exertion to secure the election of Breckenridge and Lane and on the election of Mr. Lincoln he advocated secession as the only resort left to Alabama to protect her people and preserve her rights. He was elected attorney general of the state in November, 1865. In 1868 he and others were displaced by General Meade, the commander of the military district, to make room for others under the reconstruction government established by Congress. Upon his removal, General Sanford wrote a letter to General Meade, asserting the right of Alabama to establish a government for herself, commenting on the iniquity of the reconstruction laws, and protesting against the tyranny and usurpation of the Federal authorities. This letter was widely published and everywhere met the approval of the people with the result that in September, 1870, he was renominated for attorney general and in the following November was elected by a large popular vote. He was re-elected in 1874 and again in 1876, but in 1878 he declined another nomination. December 1, 1880, he was tendered the clerkship of the supreme court, which he accepted and held until his resignation, November 5, 1892. In 1896 he was elector for the State at large on the Bryan and Sewell ticket, and on April 23, 1901, was elected delegate from Montgomery County to the constitutional convention. This was his last public service extending over a period of near fifty years. On April 2, 1861, he joined as a private, Co. F, 3rd Alabama infantry regiment, but was soon promoted to assistant quartermaster with the rank of captain on the staff of Col. J. M. Withers and later on the staff of Col. Tennant Lomax of the same regiment. He served in this capacity until March, 1862, when he was authorized by the secretary of war to return to Alabama and raise a regiment. He was elected lieutenant colonel of the 3rd battalion, Hilliard's legion, on June 25, 1862, and on November 25, 1863 was promoted colonel of the 60th Alabama infantry regiment, which formed a part of Gracie's brigade. He served through the East Tennessee campaign, and was with the brigade in the engagements around Richmond and Drury's Bluff and in all the engagements prior to the surrender at Appomattox Courthouse. He was an Episcopalian. Author: compiled the code of the city of Montgomery in 1860, 1861, and reported the 59th volume of the sessions of the supreme court of Alabama in 1879 and left numerous manuscripts of addresses before colleges, academies, and Confederate camps, all of high literary merit, and well worthy of publication. Married: March 7, 1860, in Montgomery to Sallie Maria, daughter of Col. William H. Taylor (q. v.). Children: 1. John W. A. Sanford, III, who married Minnie Smoot, of Mobile, and died, leaving a family of several children. Last residence: Montgomery.

SANFORD, THADDEUS, journalist, public official, was born in 1790, in Connecticut, and died April 30, 1867. He received an elementary education, and in early life went to New York city, where he engaged in commercial pursuits. He came to Mobile in 1822, engaged in the mercantile business, and remained in that business until 1828, when he became editor and proprietor of the Mobile "Register." He continued in that business for twenty-six years, with the exception of four years. He was elected by the legislature, in 1833, as president of the branch bank in Mobile, which office he held for eleven years. He was appointed collector of customs by President Pierce, for the port of Mobile, in 1853, and in 1854, he sold the "Register." He was continued in the collectorship by Presidents Buchanan and Davis, and he held the position until 1865. Last residence: Mobile.

SANGUINETTI, PAUL, soldier C. S. Army, capitol watchman, was born September 6, 1847, on the Island of Corsica. He came to America in 1859, and located in Richmond, Va. In April, 1862, he joined Co. K, 19th Virginia infantry regiment, C. S. Army, as a drummer boy, but shouldering a musket the following year he took part in all the campaigns and battles of Pickett's brigade and Pickett's division of Longstreet's corps, Army of northern Virginia, from the Seven Days' battle before Richmond to Five Forks and Appomattox, rising to the rank of non-commissioned officer. He removed to Montgomery in 1867, and in 1874 was appointed on the staff of Gov. George S. Houston, as ordnance officer, with rank of captain of artillery, and was continued in that position under Governors Rufus W. Cobb, 1878-82; Edward O'Neal, 1882-86; Thomas Seay, 1886-90; Thomas G. Jones, 1890-94; and William C. Oates, 1894-96. He is adjutant of Lomax Camp, No. 151, United Confederate Veterans, and assistant chief of ordnance, with the rank of major on the staff of General Harrison, commanding the Alabama division, U. C. V. He was appointed watchman in the State Capitol by Gov. Thomas E. Kilby and holds that position at this time. Married: in 1881, to Eugenia Conniff. Children: 1. Stella, m. George Ryan; 2. Alma, m. Aubrey Nelson; 3. Lucile, m. Woodford Judkins. Residence: Montgomery.

SANKEY, JOHN A., lawyer, was born November 18, 1889, at Snowdown; son of William Daniel and Carrie Lee (Sanderson) Sankey, the former a native of Snowdown, and a well known planter; grandson of Dr. John T. and Rebecca (Daniel) Sankey, the former also a native of Snowdown, where he practiced medicine, and of Almond and Elizabeth Sanderson, of Hope Hull; great-grandson of William D. Sankey, who came to Montgomery County in 1830. John A. Sankey attended the private and public schools of Montgomery County; spent three years at the Presbyterian college, Anniston; and graduated B. L., 1917 from the University of Alabama. He spent three years as a teacher and two as an employee of the Montgomery post-office after leaving the Presbyterian college and before entering the University of Alabama. In October, 1917, he began the practice of law at Montgomery. He entered the European War in 1917, was second lieutenant 12th Field artillery, 2nd U. S. division; served seventeen months in France and Germany; was in three major operations; and received two divisional citations for exceptional bravery in action. He is a Democrat and a Presbyterian. Married: Myrtle, daughter of Harvey and Kate (Quarles) Crumpton, of Montgomery. Residence: Montgomery.

SANKEY, JOHN T., physician, was born in 1825, in Greene County, Ga., deceased; son of William D. and Margaret D. (Daniel) Sankey, who were natives of Taliaferro County, Ga., and moved to Montgomery County about 1835, where the former engaged in planting; grandson of Dr. John T. Sankey, who was a native of Virginia, and later removed to Greene County, Ga., where he practiced medicine for many years, and of James Daniel, who was a native of Georgia, was of Irish descent, engaged in farming, and served in the Revolutionary War; great-grandson of Rev. Richard Sankey, and a Miss Thompson, the former a Presbyterian minister who was a native of Ireland, and came to America about 1777, and the latter who was a native of Scotland. Dr. Sankey came to Alabama with his parents, but soon after returned to Georgia, where he made his home with his uncle. He received his education in Greene County, afterward attended the University of Alabama at Tuscaloosa, and in 1850, was graduated M. D., from the University of Pennsylvania, and began practice in Montgomery County. Early in the War of Secession, he joined the First Alabama cavalry, but, because of his being a physician, was petitioned for home service. He was a Presbyterian. Married: in 1851, to Rebecca H. Daniel, daughter of Dr. James and Mary Daniel, who removed from Virginia to Georgia, and later came to Alabama, and settled in Montgomery County, where the former at first engaged in farming. SANSOM, EMMA, Confederate heroine, was born in 1846, in Social Circle, Walton County, Ga., and died August 22, 1900, in Texas, daughter of Micajah and Levina (Vance) Sansom, of Walton County, Ga., who removed to Etowah County about 1837 and settled upon a farm near Gadsden. Her educational advantages were limited but she had no superior in courage and patriotism. Upon the death of her father in 1859, she contributed her share of energy and labor towards the successful maintenance of the non-slave owning farm home. When, in 1861, her brother entered the Confederate Army, she and her sister aided their widowed mother in planting and cultivating the crops. On May 2, 1863, during Gen. N. B. Forrest's pursuit of Col. Abel D. Streight of the Federal Army, through north Alabama, the latter being under the orders of Gen. Rosecrans to burn all railroad bridges leading to Rome, Ga., in order to cut off Confederate supplies and munitions, the course led through Etowah County. From pursuit to skirmish, escape and again pursuit, the two resourceful commanders had contended over many miles of mountain. At this time Streight and his men were in the lead, with Forrest and his followers close upon their heels. Two miles from Gadsden, Black Creek was spanned by a wooden bridge, which after crossing, the Federals fired, leaving guards to prevent Forrest from approaching. "The Wizard of the Saddle," and his boys in grey came upon their quarry while the smoke of the burnt bridge still hazed the air. But once more Streight had escaped! General Forrest rode up to the Sansom home to inquire about the character of the stream. He found that the waters of Black Creek were swollen from recent rains and the banks were precipitous. Emma Sansom whom General Forrest had addressed, assured him that she had noticed the cattle of their farm crossing the creek at a certain point and volunteered to serve as pilot, accepting General Forrest's invitation to ride behind him upon his cavalry mount. So fearless was this Southern girl that when the bullets from the enemy guns pierced her skirt she waved her sun bonnet in defiance. This challenge so stirred the admiration of the boys in blue that they gallantly ceased firing until her errand was accomplished and she was safely restored to her home by her compatriots. By this service on the part of the tawny haired country lass General Forrest achieved his aims, overtook and captured Colonel Streight and his men and prevented the planned raid upon Rome. In recognition of her heroism and the ends accomplished through her assistance, the Confederate Congress voted its thanks to her, and ordered a gold medal to be presented to her. The State of Alabama through the legislature, voted her a section of land, but on account of the confusion of civic affairs at this period she received little benefit from these several acts of gratitude. A life-sized bust portrait of her hangs in the Department of Archives and History, Montgomery, presented by the Alabama Division, United Daughters of the Confederacy. In Gadsden, at the approach to the bridge over Black Creek, a marble monument bearing her effigy was erected in 1907 by the Gadsden Chapter, U. D. C., to commemorate her service to her country. Married: October 29, 1864, to C. B. Johnson, private, Co. I, 10th Alabama infantry regiment, C. S. Army, and in 1876 they removed to Texas. Children: five sons and two daughters. Last residence: Texas.

SARGENT, HARVEY OWEN, teacher, was born October 24, 1875, near Russellville, Franklin County; son of Harvey Gholson and Rebecca (Harris) Sargent, the former a member of the 16th Alabama infantry regiment, C. S. Army, wounded twice at Murfreesboro and lost his left arm from a wound; grandson of Oran and Mary (Gholson) Sargent and of Benjamin and Nancy Harris of Franklin County. He was educated in the common schools of Franklin County and the Alabama polytechnic institute where he graduated with degree of B. S., in 1901, and with the degree of M. S., for post graduate work, the same year took special course in agriculture and chemistry at that institution. He has taught at the Ninth district agricultural school, Jackson; president Sixth district agricultural school, Hamilton, since 1905 to the present time. He is a Democrat; a Baptist; Mason; Knight of Pythias; Odd Fellow. SARGENT, WINTHROP, Governor of the Mississippi Territory. See Indian chiefs and associated characters.

SATTERFIELD, JAMES ROBERT, lawyer, was born November 12, 1839, in Person County, N. C. He received a classical education and attended the Columbian College, now the George Washington University, at Washington, D. C., from which he was graduated, LL. B., in 1869. He was exempt from military service during the War of Secession because of ill health. He entered upon the practice of law at Selma in the fall of 1869, in partnership with Augustus P. Young, the firm being Satterfield & Young. This partnership continued until the death of Mr. Young in 1900, after which Mr. Satterfield practiced alone. He was the first Democratic senator from Dallas County after the reconstruction, serving a term of four years beginning in 1878, and was active in Democratic committee work during the time of the redemption of the black belt from negro domination. He is unmarried. Residence: Selma.

SAUNDERS, EUGENIUS A., merchant, was born June 15, 1848, in Oglethorpe County, Ga.; son of Payton D. and Parmelia Ann (Davis) Saunders, the former who was a native of Virginia, removed to Georgia when he was eighteen years of age, and in 1858, removed to Alabama settling in Henry County, where he engaged in planting, the latter who was a native of Randolph County, Ga. He was brought up on a farm and received his education in the common schools of the country. When he was eighteen years of age he entered the store of Dr. Martin of Hardwicksburg, as clerk, and remained there for three years. He entered into partnership with Dr. Martin, the firm name being Martin & Saunders, and they continued to do business for fifteen consecutive years. Dr. Martin later retired from business, and was succeeded by his son, the firm name at the same time being changed to Saunders & Martin. This firm continued in business until 1890, when it divided. Mr. Saunders continued in the business, and for many years used his safes for keeping the funds of the county commissioners, and it was customary for him to pay off the county debts, taking receipts for same. Mrs. Saunders operated a millinery establishment in connection with the store. He is a Democrat, a member of the Missionary Baptist church, and a Knight of Honor, of which organization he is treasurer. Married: in October, 1876, Melissa E. Martin, daughter of Rev. Dr. Martin, a Baptist minister of Henry County. Children: 1. Robert M.; 2. James A.; 3. Payton D.; and three other children, deceased. Residence: Abbeville.

SAUNDERS, JAMES E., lawyer, State legislator, collector of customs, member General Forrest's staff, was born May 7, 1806, in Brunswick County, Virginia, and died August 23, 1896, in Courtland; son of Rev. Turner H. and Frances (Dunn) Saunders, both natives of Virginia, who later located in Williamson, Tenn.; grandson of Thomas and Elizabeth (Hubbard) Saunders, and of Ishmael and Mildred Dunn, all of Virginia. His early education was obtained under private instructors, one being the Rev. Gideon Blackburn, then principal of Franklin academy. He entered the University of Georgia during the presidency of Rev. Moses Waddell where he remained until he graduated; read law in the office of Foster and Fogg in Nashville, and was admitted to the bar in 1826, locating in Moulton to practice his profession. Three years later he removed to Courtland and formed a partnership with J. J. Ormand which continued until Mr. Ormand was elected to the supreme bench of the State. In 1840 he represented Lawrence County in the legislature and was assigned to the judiciary committee. He was a member of the board of trustees of the University of Alabama for many years, and in 1837 contributed to bring about that change in the administration which resulted in the elevation of Dr. Basil Manly to the presidency, succeeding Dr. Alva Woods. In 1842 he removed to Mobile, and engaged in the commission business as a member of the firm of Bradford and Saunders, afterwards Saunders and Son. He was opposed to secession, but when Alabama withdrew from the Union, he recognized that his first allegiance was due to his State and threw himself body and soul into the Southern cause. He entered the army and served until the close of the war. He was first staff officer of General Forrest, whom he greatly admired, and it was mainly through his influence that Forrest was appointed brigadier-general. He was with Forrest in his campaign in middle Tennessee and was severely wounded at Murfreesboro by a ball passing through his body. He finally recovered and again resumed his army duties. He was honorably mentioned many times in "The life of General Albert Sidney Johnston," in the "Campaigns of Lieut. Gen. Forrest" and in other Confederate works. After the war he returned to his home at Courtland and devoted himself to agriculture, his favorite pursuit. In 1845 President Polk appointed him collector of customs of the port of Mobile, which office he held until the close of that administration. In 1852 he was on the Democratic electoral ticket, and assisted to cast the vote of Alabama for Pierce and King. In 1860 he was president of the Douglas convention held in Montgomery; in 1861, just about the outbreak of the war, he returned to his old home at Courtland. He was a Democrat and a Methodist. Author: Lawrence County is indebted to him for preserving much of her history, through some very fine memorials of her prominent families and settlers, which since his death has been published. Married: July 14, 1824, to Mary F., daughter of Robert A. Watkins of Lawrence County, formerly of Georgia. Children: 1. Frances A., d. young; 2. SAWYER, BENJAMIN F., editor, was born May 18, 1833, at Jumper's Springs, now Mardisville, Talladega County; son of Ansel and Sarah (Norris) Sawyer, both natives of South Carolina, the former a direct descendant of

Henri de Saussure, a Huguenot of Lausanne, Switzerland, who immigrated to South Carolina in 1730. He was reared on a farm and was self educated. From the age of eighteen to twenty-three he superintended his mother's farm and then for four years was a merchant in Columbiana. In June, 1861, he enlisted as a private in Co. K, 10th Alabama infantry regiment, C. S. Army, and in the following July was commissioned to raise a company, which he did, equipping it at his own expense. At the head of the company as an independent command he participated in the battles of Belmont and Columbus. In the fall of 1861 he joined a Mississippi regiment and was wounded at the battle of Shiloh. This caused him to retire from the service for a while, but he rejoined his command in the fall and at Murfreesboro he was again wounded. On account of his wound he was temporarily put in command of the post of Chattanooga. In the spring of 1863 his company, Co. K, was transferred to the 24th Alabama infantry regiment, and Captain Sawyer was promoted to lieutenant-colonel of the regiment. He shared in all the subsequent battles of the regiment, until he was wounded at Bentonville, where he retired from service. On the return of peace he followed farming and merchandising until 1869, when he established the "Mountain Home" in Talladega. After a year's editorship of this paper, he took charge, for a brief period, of the "Rome Daily," and later the "Rome Courier," Georgia papers which he edited for about five years.

He then established the "Rome Tribune," and conducted it for two years. In 1874 he edited the Atlanta "Evening Commonwealth." In 1883 after his removal to Anniston he established the Oxanna "Tribune." His literary work at this time was principally in correspondence and many contributions to the Atlanta, Philadelphia, Boston and New York papers. In 1887, in association with W. S. Larned, he established the South Anniston hardware company. Married September 7, 1857, to Charlotte Amberster, of Talladega County. Last residence: Anniston.

SCOTT, ROBERT THOMAS, farmer, boundary commissioner, was born about 1798, in North Carolina, and died June 18, 1863, at Scottsboro; son of William Alexander and Jane (Thomas) Scott, the former who came to this country from Glasgow, Scotland, was a cousin of Gen. Winfield Scott, was owner and captain of a sailing vessel and served in the Revolutionary War with John Paul Jones, the latter who was of English parentage. He came with his parents to Alabama in 1817, having previously been educated at Raleigh and Chapel Hill, N. C., and later attended a law school at Franklin, Tenn. He settled in Madison County, and engaged in planting, until 1830, when he represented that county in the lower house, and soon after removed to Jackson County. He bought a road house or tavern with a farm attached to it, which was known as the Belle Tavern of old Bellefonte, once the capital of Jackson County. In 1836, he was elected to the legislature from Jackson County; was elected circuit clerk in 1838; and while holding office in 1839, was again elected to the legislature. He was sworn in as a member when the constitutional point was raised that he could not hold two offices, and he was refused a seat in the legislature. He again went before the county as a candidate, was elected, went back to Tuscaloosa, and presented his credentials, but as he had not resigned from the office of circuit clerk, he was again refused a seat. He was in all elected four times to one session of the legislature. He was re-elected to the legislature in 1842, his term of office as circuit clerk having expired, and was appointed by Gov. Fitzpatrick as agent to settle the "two and three percent" fund, in connection with the financial troubles of the state incident to the failure of the state bank and its branches. During the administration of Gov. Collier, he was appointed on a commission to adjust the boundary line between Alabama and Georgia. He spent much of his time in Washington City, where he was engaged in prosecuting the claims of Alabama for advances made on account of the Indian and Mexican wars, and at one time was presidential elector. In 1847, he returned to the legislature, and during this session served as chairman of the committee on ways and means. He then retired from public life, lived to see his state secede, but was too old for service in the C. S. Army. He was the author of two or three books in manuscript form, which were never published, being destroyed when the Federal "Bushwhackers" destroyed his home. He was a Democrat, and in 1860, was a delegate to the convention in Baltimore that nominated John C. Breckinridge for president, and a Methodist. Married: to Elizabeth Ann Parsons of Morven, N. C. Children: 1. Mary Jane, m. Dr. James M. Parks, resided at Scottsboro, both deceased; 2. Charlotte C., m. James T. Skelton, merchant and planter, resided at Scottsboro, both deceased; 3. Dr. Robert T., m. Judith M. Buchanan, resided at Scottsboro, both deceased; 4. Walter A., m. Missouri Chambliss, Maysville, both deceased; 5. Lucy, Scottsboro, m. Robert H. Bynum, merchant and planter, deceased. Last residence: Scottsboro.

SCOTT, STELLA GILMAN, writer, was born April 9, 1844, in Tuscaloosa, and resides at Cambridge, Mass.; daughter of David and Stella (Houghton) Scott, of South Carolina and Alabama; granddaughter of James and Jane (Scott) Scott, of South Carolina, and of William and Marilla (Clay) Houghton of Lindon, Vt. Her education was in private schools of Tuscaloosa. At the age of twelve she entered a New York school for girls and later attended the University of LeRoy, N. Y.; graduating, in 1862, from the Methodist college, at Summerfield. At the close of the War of Secession, she went to Cambridge, Mass., to live with the family of her uncle, H. Houghton, senior member of Houghton, Mifflin & co., publishers, and proprietors of the Riverside press. She became a writer and interested in the higher education of women. Author: "A Mother's record," "Mothers in council," and has written for the papers and magazines. Her educational efforts resulted in the establishment of Radcliff college, Harvard university, for women students. Married: July 11, 1876, to Prof. Arthur F. Gilman, of Harvard university, teacher and author and founder of Radcliff college. Children: 1. Dorothea; 2. Alice; 3. Arthur. Residence: Cambridge, Mass.

SCOTT, SUTTON SELWYN, lawyer, Confederate commissioner of Indian affairs, author, was born November 26, 1829, in Huntsville; son of James Greene and Ann (Biddle) Scott, both residents of Madison County, the former a native of Dinwiddie County, Va., the latter of Raleigh, N. C.; grandson of John Scott; and great-grandson of John Scott, a Scotch emigrant to Dinwiddie County. The Scotts were well-to-do planters and slave owners, and were related to the Darvells and Thompsons of Virginia. S. S. Scott received his early education in the schools of Huntsville, then entered the University of Tennessee, where he graduated, 1850. He studied law; was admitted to the bar, and entered upon the practice in Huntsville. He was elected to the house of representatives in 1857, and re-elected in 1859, after a most exciting canvass. "His speech in this canvass at Huntsville, upon the vote of which the election hinged, was said to have been one of great eloquence and power, so much so as to call forth the wildest applause." He was a member of the extra session of the legislature called by Gov. A. B. Moore about the time the states were on the point of withdrawing from the Union. He was a member of the committee, with E. C. Bullock, John T. Morgan, Thomas H. Watts, John D. Phelan, James H. Clanton, A. B. Meek and others, appointed by the governor to meet President-elect Jefferson Davis at West Point, Ga., and to escort him to Montgomery. From the position of an assistant, Mr. Scott was promoted, February 26, 1863, to the responsible post of commissioner of Indian affairs to succeed David Hubbard. Mr. Scott labored diligently in this position until the end of the war. On the return of peace he settled on his plantation in Russell County. He represented the county in the constitutional convention of 1875, and also in the house of representatives, 1884-1886, and 1890-1891. He was a delegate to the Cincinnati Democratic convention of 1880. In 1885 he was appointed by President Cleveland a commissioner to adjudicate depredation claims in New Mexico; and during Mr. Cleveland's second term he was chairman of the commission to arrange the land troubles with the Ute Indians upon their reservation in Utah. While he was an active and capable man of affairs, Mr. Scott was in an equal degree a student and a man of fine literary and historical tastes. Author: "South-booke," 1880; "The Mobilians, or talks about the South," 1896; "The Alabama legislature of 1857-8 and 1859-60," in Publication of the Alabama Historical Society, 1904, vol. 5; "Recollections of the Alabama Democratic State Convention of 1860," in Publications of the Alabama Historical Society, 1899-1903, vol. 4; and "Some Account of Confederate Indian Affairs," in Gulf State Historical Magazine, 1903-04, vol. 2. Married: in 1864, to Lula M., daughter of William Hurt, planter of Russell County, and granddaughter of William Hurt, of North Carolina, a soldier of the Revolution. There were children to this union. Last residence: Auburn.

SCREWS, BENJAMIN HARRISON, lawyer, was born April 11, 1843, at Glennville, Barbour, now Russell County, and died at Montgomery, February 22, 1905; a brother of William Wallace Screws (q. v.). Benjamin H. Screws was educated in the common schools of Barbour County. On the outbreak of the War of Secession he enlisted, becoming lieutenant, then captain of Co. K, and later adjutant of the Twenty-ninth Alabama infantry regiment, his service dating from January 20, 1861, to April 26, 1865, being wounded at Atlanta. After the war he devoted himself to journalism and law; later became magistrate; was secretary of the constitutional convention of 1875; was a member of the house of representatives in 1890-91, 1894-95, 1898-99, and 1900-01; and in November, 1902, was elected a state senator. He was the author of "The Loll Legislature of Alabama," purporting to be a history of the so-called legislature composed of unlettered negroes and alien whites, who met under military protection in the capitol in 1868. Married: October 8, 1867, at Wetumpka, to Emma McNeill, daughter of Dr. Daniel S. and Elizabeth (Jeffries) McNeill. Children: 1. Michael Hamilton. Last residence: Montgomery.

SCREWS, MICHEL HAMILTON, lawyer, was born May 4, 1882, at Montgomery; son of Benjamin Harrison and Emma (McNeill) Screws (q. v.) and nephew of William Wallace Screws (q. v.). Michel H. Screws was educated in the public schools of Montgomery, in the university school and later attended the University of Alabama, from which latter institution he was graduated LL. B. in 1900. On June 15, 1900, he commenced to practice law in Montgomery, and has since continued with the exception of a short time spent in Texas. He was recording secretary under Govs. Samford and Jelks, 1901-07; was a representative of the twenty-eighth senatorial district in the legislature of 1911; and in 1911, after the adjournment of the session, he was appointed by Gov. O'Neal as judge of the court of common pleas of Montgomery, which position he held until January, 1917. He is a Democrat; a Methodist; an Odd Fellow; Woodman of the World; Knight of Pythias; Elk; Tribe of Ben Hur; Red Men; and a member of the Phi Delta Theta fraternity. Married: to May Jennis, daughter of Dr. Allan and May (Sherman) Jennis of Port Arthur, Tex. One child, a girl, has been born to this union. Residence: Montgomery.

SCREWS, WILLIAM WALLACE, editor, lawyer, secretary of State for Alabama, postmaster and Confederate soldier, was born February 25, 1839, at Jernigan, Barbour, now Russell County, died August 7, 1913, at his country place near Coosada, Elmore County, and is buried in Oakwood cemetery, Montgomery; son of Benjamin and Mourning Jones (Drake) Screws, both of Nash County, N. C., who removed to Barbour County in the early history of the State, the former a merchant at Glenville, circuit clerk, and a powerful factor in the ante-bellum politics in his section of the State; grandson of John Screws and wife, who was a Miss Whitehead, and of James and Nancy (Arrington) Drake, all of Nash County, N. C. Major Screws' ancestors, on both lines, were English. The Drakes and Arringtons went to North Carolina from Massachusetts and Virginia, respectively. He received his early education in Glenville, then Barbour, now Russell County, among his teachers being Alpheus Baker, later a distinguished Confederate general. He made a good record in Latin, Greek and English literature, but left school at sixteen years of age, financial reverses that overtook his father depriving him of the college course for which he had been trained. He went to Montgomery in early manhood and read law under Thomas H. Watts, afterwards governor of Alabama and attorney-general of the Confederacy, and was admitted to the bar in the circuit court of Montgomery County, June 15, 1859, entering immediately upon the practice of the profession, under special statute owing to his not being of age. In 1906, he received the honorary degree of LL. D. from the University of Alabama. In the epoch-making campaign of 1860, he supported the Bell and Everett ticket, standing for the preservation of the Union, and the maintenance of the rights of the south under the constitution. He served as secretary of State from 1878 to 1882, continuing his editorial work, however, upon "The Advertiser." During President Cleveland's first administration he held a position in the library of congress and during the second Cleveland administration was postmaster of Montgomery from July 1, 1893, to November 15, 1897.

Although opposed to secession Major Screws was one of the first young men in Alabama to volunteer for military service, following the State's withdrawal from the union, and left Montgomery with the "True Blues" for Fort Barancas, near Pensacola. Afterwards he enlisted in Hilliard's legion, and was in service in Tennessee and Kentucky, participating, September, 1863, in the battle of Chickamauga. Upon the reorganization of the legion into the 59th and 60th regiments, he was made first lieutenant of Co. E, 59th regiment. Under command of General Longstreet he took part in the siege of Knoxville and minor engagements. He went from Tennessee to Petersburg, Va., with Gracie's brigade, Bushrod Johnson's division, and with the troops under General Beauregard aided in repulsing General Butler's movements against the Confederate capital. In May, 1864, he was wounded at Drewry's Bluff. Later he took part in the battles about Petersburg, 1864, and was on siege duty and in various engagements, until the evacuation, April 2, 1865. Four days later he was captured at Sailor's Creek and taken to Johnson's Island, Lake Erie, from which he was not released until June 19, 1865. He returned to Alabama, making a brief visit to his old home in Glenville, then went to Montgomery where he resumed his permanent residence. He received his title of major by reason of his service on the staff of Gen. James T. Holtzclaw in the Alabama state troops.

Major Screws manifested a talent for writing while still a country youth, in Glenville, contributing letters of a political and controversial character to the press, during 1852 and later. While a soldier in the Confederate Army he sent frequent letters to "The Advertiser" from the scenes of strife that so strongly convinced the owner and editor of that paper, Samuel G. Reid, of his abilities that upon the restoration of peace he offered his correspondent a position on the editorial staff. Major Screws had returned to Montgomery with the intention of making the law his life's work, but Mr. Reid's overtures, accompanied with an offer to sell a half interest in the paper to the young soldier for a few hundred dollars, and his own time to discharge the debt, definitely changed the course of his life. His editorial connection with "The Advertiser" covered a period of forty-eight years and during this almost half century, his pen was always wielded for conservative government, white supremacy and in behalf of every movement tending to the educational, civic, religious and political welfare of the state and the nation. In 1885, Frank P. Glass became associated with Major Screws in the conduct and control of "The Advertiser," the former giving his talents to the business department, while Major Screws continued in control of the editorial policies. Following the announcement of his death statesmen and publicists all over the nation expressed high praise of Major Screws. Col. Hillary A. Herbert, a life long friend, secretary of the navy under President Cleveland, paid a tribute that epitomized the expression of all: "Controlling the great central organ of the Democratic party, Wallace Screws occupied the most difficult position in his State for nearly half a century. This was the most eventful period in the history of Alabama. Self government and preservation of white civilization were at stake. The God in whom the great Christian editor always trusted mercifully lengthened out his life until the battle was won, and now that our faithful servant has died at his post, the impartial verdict of history will be that while in the heat of conflict others won wider fame, Wallace Screws was the most useful citizen of his day. Others reaped honor and the emoluments of office that were the fruits of his labor. He was as modest and self-denying as he was courageous." Gov. Thomas G. Jones said on hearing his distinguished fellow citizen was dead: "No man ever lived in Alabama who labored more unselfishly for the good of the State or set a finer example in his career of devotion to the things that make for the uplift of man. His convictions always marked out his pathway, whether it was followed by few or many, and he never hesitated to differ with and argue against the opinions of the majority, if he felt them wrong or believed that their success would not redound to the good of society. He felt that his position as the head of a great newspaper was a sacred trust, and not a mere personal possession." He was a Democrat; a Royal Arch Mason; Knight Templar, and a member of the council of Royal and select master. He was an Episcopalian, at the time of his death being senior warden of St. John's church, and had served as a member of every council of the diocese of Alabama from 1885, with two exceptions, until his death; delegate to the general conventions of the Protestant Episcopal church at Boston, 1904, Richmond, 1907, and Cincinnati, 1910. Author: in addition to his editorial writings in "The Advertiser," he contributed a history of Alabama journalism to the "Memorial Record of Alabama," vol. 2, pp. 158-235. Married: April 25, 1867, in Montgomery, to Emily Frances, daughter of Judge William

White and Mary (Ware) Holt, both of Augusta, Ga. SEAY, THOMAS, lawyer, twenty-seventh governor of Alabama, was born November 20, 1846, near Erie, Hale County, in what was at that time a part of Greene County, and died March 30, 1896, in Greensboro, Hale County; son of

Reuben and Ann Green (McGee) Seay, the former who was a native of Georgia, a planter, who moved to Alabama about the time it was admitted into the Union, settled near old Erie on the Warrior River and purchased a plantation, and was a descendent of the family of that name who came to Virginia in the early colonial days, and settled in Hanover and Amelia Counties where some of their descendents still live, while others soon afterwards removed to Georgia; grandson of Julius and Susan (Howard) Seay, who lived in Georgia, and of Frank and Annie (McAlpine) McGee, who lived at old Greene County, the former who was of Irish ancestry, and came to Alabama while it was still a territory; great-grandson of a McAlpine of Scotch descent, who married Mary Moore, the latter who was a daughter of Anne Greene, of the family of Gen. Nathaniel Greene. His early life was spent on his father's plantation, where he attended the country schools until he was about twelve years of age. At that time his father went to Greensboro, and there he received his preparatory education. He entered the Southern university, of which at that time, Bishop W. S. Wightman was president, but his studies were interrupted by the outbreak of the War of Secession, and in 1863, at the age of seventeen years, he enlisted in the C. S. Army as private and went with his company and regiment to Mobile. He was captured at Spanish Fort and at Blakely, and was imprisoned on Ship Island. After the war he again entered the Southern university to complete his course of study, and was graduated A. M., in 1867. After completing his collegiate course, he read law in the office of Judge A. A. Coleman at Greensboro, and in 1869, was admitted to the supreme court of Alabama. He immediately began practice as junior member of the firm of Coleman & Seay, and continued in his profession until 1885. He also engaged in planting. In 1876, he was elected on the Democratic ticket, to represent Hale County as a separate senatorial district, in the Alabama senate; and twice re-elected, and in 1884, was elected president of that body. He was elected governor in 1886, and was again elected in 1888. He was the friend and champion of the negro's rights and education, and it was said of him by Booker T. Washington that he was the best friend the negro race ever had. In 1890, at the close of his second gubernatorial term, Gov. Seay was a candidate for the U. S. senate, but was defeated by the Hon. James M. Pugh. He was a delegate to the Democratic National Convention, in 1880; in 1884, was chairman of the convention which nominated Gen. Hancock for the presidency; and was at one time vice-president of the National Prison Association. SELLERS, JOHN A., business man. Residence: Montgomery.

SEMMES, OLIVER JOHN, lawyer, jurist, legislator, and Confederate soldier, was born August 29, 1839, at Norfolk, Va., and died in January, 1918, in Mobile; son of Admiral Raphael and Anne E. (Spencer) Semmes (q. v.). He was educated at Spring Hill college, near Mobile, and in 1858 was appointed to the U. S. military academy, West Point, N. Y., where he was a cadet until January, 1861, when upon the secession of Alabama, he returned to Mobile to fight for the South. He was appointed second lieutenant by President Davis and was assigned to duty at Fort Morgan, as instructor of volunteers. In April, 1861, he was assigned to command the only artillery company then in the regular army of the Confederate States, which afterwards was known as Semmes' battery, being stationed at New Orleans until the fall of that city, August, 1862, and having participated in the battle at Baton Rouge. Following this event he was stationed at Port Hudson having been transferred with his battery to Gen. Richard Taylor's command in western Louisiana, and was engaged in several artillery fights with Federal gunboats under Admiral Farragut. He was placed in command of the Confederate gunboat, "Diana," and participated in the battle of Camp Bisland in Bayou Teche, April 13, 1863. Being ordered to cover the retreat of General Taylor, he performed that duty until abandoned without support, he was compelled to burn the boat and surrender, at Franklin. The Confederate military history, vol. 7, page 794-95, says: "He was sent to Fortress Monroe as a prisoner of war, and put on board a transport to be taken to Fort Delaware, with ninety-one other officers. In Hampton Roads they seized the boat, put into shore and landed on the coast of southeast Virginia, whence they made their way through the Dismal Swamp, after twenty-one days, to Richmond. When the party of officers landed, Captain Semmes was selected as commander, under a regular company organization, and his good judgment doubtless contributed to the success of their escape." Was promoted to major upon rejoining his artillery, and given command of six six-gun batteries, attached to Moulton's division. He participated in the battle of Mansfield, where the Confederates won a great victory; was chief of artillery, cavalry division, Pleasant Hill, and was conspicuous for his leadership in the battles attending the Federal retreat, notably Mansura and Yellow Bayou.

He was later attached to the staff of General Taylor, as chief of artillery. After the surrender he located in Mobile, where he read law, being admitted to the bar in 1866. He served in the Alabama legislature during 1870, and in 1874 was elected judge of the city court, a position he held until his death, a period of forty-four years. He was a member of the Manassas club of Mobile; a Democrat; and an Episcopalian. Married: in 1874, to Mrs. Amante Hamlin, daughter of Dr. E. P. Gaines (q. v.). Children: 1. Raphael, physician, deceased, married, Camden; 2. Oliver John, jr.; vice president and manager of the Export fuel and ice company, Pensacola, Fla., graduate of the Alabama polytechnic institute, with the degree of B. S., 1897; 3. Amante, m. Percy Finley, Memphis, Tenn. Last residence: Mobile.

William and Mary (Jarboe) Boarman, the former the founder of the family who came to America in 1645, locating in Maryland, captain of St. Mary's County militia, 1661-76, presiding justice, 1678, member house of burgesses, 1671-75, and high sheriff, 1678-79, of Andrew and Elizabeth (Green) Simpson, and of James and Mary (Anderson nee Goodrick) of Charles County, Md.; great-great-great-grandson of Rhuys, or Rice, and Jane (Seymour or St. Maur) Hooe, both natives of England, emigrated to Virginia in 1635, was Burgess for Shirley Hundred Island, in 1642, and for Charles City County, in 1644, 1645, and 1646, and who received many grants of valuable land, of William and Mary (Bretton) Thompson, of St. Mary's County, Md., of Dr. Thomas and Jane (Cockshutt) Matthews, of Charles County, Md., the former an immigrant to Maryland in 1638, of Lieut.-Col. John and Mary (Tettershall) Jarboe, the former a native of Dijon, France, who came to Maryland about 1657, justice of St. Mary's County, 1663-65, member house of burgesses, 1674, and commissioned lieutenant, March 15, 1658, of Raphael Neale, of Richard and Mary Edelen, immigrants to Maryland in 1664, of Marmaduke Semmes, and wife who was Mrs. Fortune Medford, widow of Bulwer Medford, the former the progenitor of the Semmes family in Maryland, date and place from which he came unknown, who married in Maryland, of Robert Goodrick, of Maryland, and of Robert and Mary Green; great-great-great-great-grandson of William and Anne Thompson, immigrants to America in 1646, of William and Mary (Nabbs) Bretton, of St. Mary's County, Md., of John Cockshutt, immigrant to Maryland, of Gov. Thomas and Winifred (Seybourne or Seyborn) Green, the former the second proprietary governor of Maryland who came to that state from England in 1633; great-great-great-great-great-grandson of Thomas Nabbs. Raphael Semmes received an academic education and in 1826 was appointed a midshipman by President J. Q. Adams. In 1832 he passed an examination after having studied naval tactics at Norfolk, Va. He studied law under his brother at Cumberland, Md., while on furlough, and was admitted to the bar in 1834. He was commissioned a lieutenant in 1837, after having served as second master and later as acting lieutenant of a frigate. In 1842, he became a citizen of Alabama, removing his family to a home on the west bank of the Perdido River, and in 1849 locating in Mobile. He was first lieutenant of the brig "Porpoise" at the outbreak of the war with Mexico but was transferred later to the "Cumberland" and subsequently to the "Raritan." He was in command of the battery of heavy guns sent ashore from the "Raritan" at the battle of Vera Cruz. Afterwards he was placed in command of the "Somers" and was blockading Vera Cruz when she capsized and went down in a heavy storm, half of her crew drowning. After the Mexican War he was for several years inspector of lighthouses on the gulf coast. In 1855 he was promoted to the rank of commander and three years later became secretary of the lighthouse board at Washington. He resigned his commission at the outbreak of the War of Secession and was recommissioned with the same rank by the Confederate government. He was immediately sent to New York to purchase materials for the navy, remaining in that city until the latter part of March, 1861, when he returned south and was placed in charge of the lighthouse bureau. After the combat at Fort Sumter he sought service in the navy, was ordered to New Orleans and there equipped and fitted up a five hundred ton merchantman called the "Sumter." With this little vessel he passed through the West Indies, cruised along the coast of South America, captured seventeen merchantmen, crossed the ocean, and landed at Gibraltar where he was blockaded. Selling the "Sumter," he went to England, thence to the Azores where he was promoted to a captaincy, returned to England, and was ordered to the command of the "Alabama," which had been built for the Confederacy at Liverpool, and had been fitted out at the Azores. In August, 1862, he began his second famous cruise, spending some time in the vicinity of the Azores where he made depredation upon the whaling fleet of the enemy. He then moved up to within two hundred miles of New York City, remaining there and effecting captures for several days, passing from there to the West Indies and then to Texas. On the night of January 11, 1863, he fought and sank the federal steamer "Hatteras." He then skirted the coast of South America, crossed to the Cape of Good Hope, thence across the Indian Ocean to the southeast coast of Asia, returned to the Cape of Good Hope, and finally dropped anchor at Cherbourg, France, where he was blockaded by the federal steamer "Kearsarge." He challenged the enemy, June 19, 1864, the battle lasting over an hour and ending by the sinking of the "Alabama" just after she had struck her color. The Alabama fired three hundred and seventy shots, of which only twenty-eight struck as the "Kearsarge" was protected by her armor. The "Kearsarge" fired one hundred and seventy-three shots of which nearly all took effect. Twenty minutes after her surrender, the "Alabama" sank, nine of her crew were killed, ten were drowned, and twenty-one wounded. Semmes and forty officers and men, who went down with the boat, were picked up by the English yacht "Deerhound" owned by John Lancaster, who had been a spectator of the battle. The men were taken safely to England, the English government refusing to turn them over to the enemy, and Captain Semmes was presented with a handsome sword by a number of British officers to replace the one that he had thrown into the sea at the end of the battle. He sailed from England, October 3, 1864, reaching Richmond, by way of Matamoras, January 16, 1865. In February, 1865, he was commissioned a rear-admiral and assigned to the Confederate fleet on the James River. When Richmond was evacuated, he blew up his ships which consisted of three iron clad and five wooden steamers, and repaired to Danville, Va., where his four hundred men were organized into a brigade and assigned to Gen. J. E. Johnston's army. He returned to Mobile after the surrender at Greensboro, N. C., and opened a law office. In December, 1865, he was arrested and confined in the marine barracks at Washington for four months, and was then released by the president's proclamation. Several weeks after his release, he was elected judge of the probate court of Mobile, but was notified by the war department that he would not be permitted to hold the office. He again took up the practice of law, was editor of a Mobile newspaper for a short while, became a professor in the Louisiana military institute, edited a daily journal of Memphis, Tenn., finally returning to the practice of law in Mobile. Author: "Service afloat and ashore;" "Campaign of General Scott in the Valley of Mexico;" "Memoirs of service afloat during the war between the states," 1869. SHACKELFORD, EDWARD MADISON, educator, president Troy normal college, was born February 1, 1863, at Pintlala, Montgomery County; son of Madison and Sophronia Jane (Ledbetter) Shackelford, the former a native of Pintlala, a farmer, enlisted, March 12, 1862, as 3rd lieutenant, Co. F, 2nd Alabama cavalry regiment, Ferguson's brigade, C. S. Army, rose to be first lieutenant, and served as one of President Davis's escorts; grandson of George and Annette (Jeter) Shackelford, early settlers of Montgomery County, the former a farmer and Baptist, emigrated from Edgefield, S. C., in 1818, and of David E. and Pattie Harrison (Smith) Ledbetter, of Morganville, now Tyson, great-grandson of Francis Shackelford, a captain in 1764; great-great-grandson of John Shackelford, born April 9, 1712; and great-great-great-grandson of Francis Shackelford. The Shackelfords came from South Carolina, the Ledbetters from Petersburg, Va., and the Jeters from Georgia. Professor Shackelford was educated in the rural schools of his native county; and graduated A. B. from the University of Alabama in 1885. In that year he began teaching in Troy; was assistant in the male high school two years; and was professor of civics and English in Troy normal school for twelve years. Since 1899 he has been president of that institution. He served as captain of the Oates rifles, Co. B, 2nd regiment, Alabama State Troops, and also commanded the Troy rifles, Co. H, 1st regiment. For two terms he was secretary of the Alabama educational association. He is a Democrat; a Baptist; and a Knight of Pythias. Married: February 1, 1886, to Rosa Lee, daughter of Thomas Kirven and Sarah (Hill) Brantley, of Troy. Children: 1. Lucy, deceased; 2. Ruth, m. John Wesley Solomon; 3. Eddie Lee, m. William Reid Lancaster; 4. Thomas Madison, m. Zula Manning; 5. Joseph Francis, unm.; 6. Mary, deceased; 7. Annette. Residence: Troy.

SHACKELFORD, JOSEPHUS, teacher, Baptist minister and member Alabama legislature, was born February 6, 1830, at Portsmouth, Va., and died May 5, 1915, at Tuskegee; son of Satterwhite and Courtney Ann (Brown) Shackelford of Portsmouth, the former served as a marine on the frigate "Constitution," during the War of 1812, and immigrated to Mississippi in 1835 with his wife and five children, settling in Pontotoc where he died August, 1855. The Shackelfords were of English origin, settling at an early day in the tidewater region of Virginia. The Browns were North Carolinians. Rev. Mr. Shackelford attended the schools of Pontotoc, and by 1847 had acquired a good English education. In 1849 he joined the Baptist church, and resolved to devote his life to the ministry. Feeling acutely the disadvantages of his imperfect education, he went to work and through the means acquired from his cotton field, supplemented by a loan from a friend and together with the help given by the Baptist educational society of Georgia, he was enabled, in the winter of 1850-51, to enter the Theological department of Mercer university, from which institution he was graduated in July, 1855, with the degree of A. B. Three years later this college conferred upon him the degree of A. M. In August, 1855, he took charge of a mission station in Memphis, Tenn., and carried on the work there for several months. In January, 1856, he became president of the Baptist female institute at Moulton, and at the same time, was called to the pastorate of the Moulton Baptist church, also serving churches at Courtland, Liberty and Mount Pleasant. From 1867 until late in 1876 he was pastor of the Baptist church in Tuscumbia. He also, in this interval, for two years taught the Male academy in Tuscumbia. In December, 1876, he removed to Forest City, Ark., where, until January, 1879, he had charge of the Baptist church and a school in that place. From January, 1879, until June, 1889, with the exception of one year, he taught the Mountain View high school, near Trinity, Morgan County, and the next year had charge of the school at Leighton. He was president of the North Alabama Baptist collegiate institute and normal school in 1893, 1894, 1897, 1898. He was a member of the legislature in 1882-1883. In 1847 during the progress of the War with Mexico, when only seventeen years of age, he was so anxious to become a soldier that in defiance of the wishes and commands of his parents he ran away from home and joined a company at Vicksburg, commanded by Capt. John T. Wray and was mustered into the United States service. Captain Wray's company, with some others, formed a battalion commanded by Capt. Patton Anderson. Young Shackelford was a corporal in his company. The battalion landed at Tampico, Mexico, in January, 1848, but the war being nearly over the battalion had no duties to perform apart from drilling and guard duty. In June the battalion returned from Mexico and the July following, young Shackelford arrived home in such a wretched physical condition that it was six months before he regained his normal health. In the fall of 1862 he was elected captain of a company of cavalry in Colonel Johnson's regiment, General Roddy's brigade, resigned after one year of service and became chaplain of the regiment, but later returned home and resumed his educational and ministerial work. Apart from ministerial and educational work, Dr. Shackelford was a factor in the newspaper world. Soon after the war, in connection with Maj. D. C. White, the permission of the Federal authorities having been secured, he began the publication of a Baptist paper in Moulton, "The Christian Herald" which he edited, the first issue being July 18, 1865. The paper was removed to Tusculumbia in 1867, where he bought out Major White's interest, and in 1872 the paper was removed to Nashville. In 1868 while living in Tusculumbia, he began the publication of "The Tusculumbia Times," which was afterwards absorbed into "The North Alabamian" of which he was editor and proprietor until he sold out in 1875. In 1886 he became associate editor of "The Alabama Baptist," and was connected with that paper one year. In addition to his newspaper work Dr. Shackelford is the author of, "History of the Muscle Shoals Baptist Association, with a History of the churches of the same and Biographical sketches of its ministers." He was moderator of this association several times, and was its clerk for more than twenty-five years. He was a Democrat; and a Mason. Married: June 18, 1855, at Penfield, Ga., to Ann Cordella, daughter of E. B. and Susan (Underwood) Stow, the former a native of Connecticut, a member of the highly respected family of that state. SHAVER, LEWELLYN A., lawyer, was born January 18, 1844, near Bowling Green, Ky.; son of Oscar Hill and Caroline M. (Taylor) Shaver, the former a native of Abingdon, Va., and a minister of the Protestant Methodist church who removed about 1850 from Bowling Green to Montgomery, where he died in 1858, the latter a member of the noted Taylor family of Kentucky. Mr. Shaver received his early education in Warsaw and Gainesville, Sumter County, and in Montgomery. He graduated in 1863 with the degree of A. B. from Lynchburg college, Virginia. He studied law after the war in the office of Gov. Thomas Watts and Col. D. L. Troy, and was admitted to the practice in 1867; was superintendent of education for Montgomery County from 1880 to 1888, at which date he removed to Washington, D. C. In the early fall of 1863 he enlisted in the "Gilmer Greys" of Montgomery, which formed part of the Hilliard's legion and was with his command, in the battle of Chickamauga and in Longstreet's East Tennessee campaign. He was promoted from the ranks for gallant conduct at Bean's Station and made sergeant major of the 60th Alabama infantry regiment, then in Gracie's brigade. This brigade joined Gen. Lee's army at Deep Bottom, Va., and was at the battle of Drury's Bluff and in the eight months constant fighting in the trenches at Petersburg. While at Petersburg he was selected first lieutenant, but owing to the rapid close of the war, he failed to receive his commission. He served with his command until the surrender at Appomattox. He is a Democrat and was active in political affairs during the reconstruction period; elected chairman of the Democratic county committee 1879, which position he held as long as he was a citizen of the county. He was a presidential elector in 1884, and as such canvassed with the Hon. Hilary Herbert the entire second Alabama district, speaking at thirty-nine different places in that district. In 1888, Mr. Shaver was appointed by Secretary Vilas, one of the assistant attorneys in the land division of the interior department, and subsequently was made solicitor of the interstate commerce commission in which capacity he served over eighteen years, conducting and arguing cases in behalf of the commission and against railway common carriers in most of the Federal courts from San Francisco and Los Angeles to New York and particularly in the Supreme Court at Washington. Author: "History of the 60th Alabama regiment, C. S. Army." Married: November 25, 1873, in Montgomery, to Clara, daughter of Dr. A. A. and Mrs. Margaret P. Wilson. Residence: Washington.

SHAW, JAMES, editor and legislator, was born July 9, 1840, at Ashton-under-Lyne, County Lancashire, England; son of James and Anne (Clement) Shaw of that place who emigrated to America in 1848, and settled in Portsmouth, N. H., where he resided until his death in 1869. He was educated in the graded schools of Portsmouth and learned the trade of printer in the office of the "Portsmouth Daily Chronicle." In 1865 he removed to Chicago, where he was a printer on the "Daily Republican." In December of that year he came to Mobile and helped to conduct "The Nationalist," a Republican paper, projected to promote the interests of the negro race. In 1867, he established another Republican paper, "The Selma Press," in Selma, where he remained until 1874 when he removed to Aurora, Ill. He was a member of the first Alabama legislature in 1876 under Republican reconstruction methods; appointed librarian of the public library of Aurora, Ill., in 1884, a position which he held for many years. He was elected clerk of the city board of Aurora, 1884, and held that office for sixteen years by four successive elections. In 1888 he was appointed official reporter of the circuit court of Kane County, Ill., and has since held the position by appointment at the hands of various judges; in 1905 he was elected member of the board of education of West Aurora, and by the board was chosen secretary. He served in the War of Secession as a private in the 16th New Hampshire volunteer infantry, his service terminating in Louisiana by expiration of enlistment soon after the surrender of Fort Hudson. He is a Republican; an Episcopalian; a Mason; an Elk; and member of the G. A. R. Author: of numerous newspaper articles and of reports as librarian of the city of Aurora. Married: June 29, 1885, at Portsmouth, N. H., to Ella Dora, daughter of William B. and Rebecca (Shaw) Loud, all of Portsmouth. Children: 1. Alice Ada; 2. Marian Hannah, deceased. Residence: Aurora, Ill.

SHAW, JOHN LANE, physician, was born December 22, 1814, in Robeson County, N. C., and died October 8, 1885, at Belleville; son of John and Sarah (McLoud) Shaw, the former who was born in Scotland, and lived at Fayetteville, Cumberland County, N. C. He received his education at Donaldson academy in Fayetteville, taught for a number of years in his native state, and in 1841, removed to Alabama, where he taught school at Prattville. He studied medicine with Dr. Kelly of Coosa County, and attended lectures at Louisville, Ky. He returned to Alabama, practiced for one year at Talladega, and in April, 1845, removed to Evergreen, Conecuh County. In 1846, he went to Belleville, where he continued his practice; in 1858, removed to Pineville, Monroe County; in 1867, to Evergreen; returned to Pineville, in 1868; and in 1874, finally settled in Belleville. Besides being a physician, he was also a farmer. He was a Democrat, and a member of the Presbyterian church, of which he was elder. SHAW, WILLIAM HAMPTON, lawyer, was born December 5, 1884, at Blountsville, Blount County; son of Adamson Tannehill and Margaret Isabella (Key) Shaw, the former who was a native of Springhill, Marengo County, and was a music teacher; grandson of Adamson Tannehill and Piercia (Westbrook) Shaw, who lived at Leighton, Colbert County, and of Dr. George and Margaret (Bolling) Key, who lived at Gandy's Cave near Falkville; great-grandson of Adamson Tannehill and Frances (Hampton) Shaw, the former who was a native of Scotland, later settled in North Carolina and in 1819 removed to Alabama, settling near Leighton, the latter who was a native of North Carolina, of English descent, being a member of the same branch of the Hampton family as Wade Hampton, a Confederate soldier, and of Pleasant Key who emigrated from Hull, England, to North Carolina, and later removed to Morgan County, settling near Falkville about 1819. William H. Shaw received his education at the Mount Hope high school and the Town Creek high school, later attended the Falkville normal college and was graduated LL. B. from the University of Chattanooga, 1906. He began practice at Tusculumbia, October, 1908, where he has since remained. He has been county solicitor for Colbert County since January 1, 1914; a member of the house of representatives from Colbert County, having been elected in 1918 for a term of four years, and served on the committees of rules, roads, military, judiciary and was chairman on the revision of the general committee; was government appeal agent for Colbert County, 1917-18; was campaign director for Colbert County for the Alabama memorial, 1919; was author of the prohibition bill enacted by the legislature of 1919, known as the "Bone Dry Law," of the "Blue Sky Law," and also of House Bill 842, to encourage the manufacture of atmospheric nitrogen. He is a Democrat; a Methodist, and has served as steward in the Methodist church at Tusculumbia since October, 1909; a Woodman of the World; and an Odd Fellow. Married: on October 2, 1904, at Hanceville, Cullman County, to Marguerite Eliza Simmons, daughter of Henry Clay and Antoinette (Saxon) Simmons who lived at Millerville, Clay County, the former who was a teacher, minister, orator and scholar, representing Clay County in the legislature of Alabama in 1886; and a descendant of the Burns family of which Robert Burns was a member. Children: 1. Marguerite Simmons, b. August 7, 1905; 2. Piercia Lucile, b. July 20, 1907; 3. Frances Isabella, b. December 10, 1909; 4. Mabel Antoinette, b. April 16, 1912; 5. Hattie Elizabeth, b. June 15, 1914; 6. Mary Zura, b. December 12, 1917. Residence: Tusculumbia.

SHEARER, GILBERT, pioneer and promoter, was born in 1789, in Newburgh, Orange County, N. Y., deceased. He was of German descent. When he was about twenty years of age, he removed to Georgia and later to Alabama, where he, Col. George Phillips, and William Rufus King, at one time vice-president of the United States, laid out the town of Selma, giving it its present name. He established the first bank in Selma, the Real Estate Banking company, and was its president, in 1838. In the year, 1836, he was major-general of the Sixth division, Alabama militia, and was active in suppressing the Creek Indian uprising. He was one of the early members of the Episcopal church in Alabama. He is buried in The Live Oak Cemetery at Selma, and his will is on record in the probate court of Dallas County. Married: in 1810, at Augusta, Ga., to Martha Ann Cowles, daughter of William Marston and Anna (Meriwether) Cowles, who lived at Augusta, Ga., the former who came to Alabama in 1819; and a sister of Thomas Meriwether Cowles, who projected the South and North railroad, now the Louisville & Nashville, and of John Cowles, a leading physician of Alabama. SHEATS, CHARLES CHRISTOPHER, U. S. commissioner, consul to Denmark, member of congress, member State legislature and the constitutional convention, 1865, was born April 10, 1839, in Walker County; son of William W. and Mary (Garner) Sheats, the former a native of Wilkes County, Ga., born October 22, 1809, and removed to Walker County, the latter a native of Tennessee, born in 1811; grandson of Archibald and Amanda (Gibson) Sheats, natives of Georgia who removed to Lawrence County in 1822, and of Jacob and Mary (Hunter) Garner, the former a soldier in the Texas revolution, and the Mexican War. Mr. Sheats was reared on a farm, received a good education at Somerville academy in Morgan County, and began teaching school at eighteen years of age. He represented Winston County in the session of 1861 and strenuously opposed the secession of the State. At the next term of the legislature, 1862, he was expelled from the house on account of alleged disloyalty to the Confederate government. He was arraigned, indicted and imprisoned for treason. The Federal general, Thomas, in December, 1863, retaliated by ordering Gen. Crook, at Huntsville to arrest William McDowell and confine him in jail as a hostage for Christopher Sheats. Nothing further was done with Mr. Sheats except to hold him in duress until the end of the war. In September, 1865, he was elected a member of the constitutional convention for Winston County. In the same year he was a candidate for congress from the sixth district. In 1868 he was a Grant elector and the next year was appointed U. S. consul to Denmark where he remained three years. In 1872 he was a delegate to the Philadelphia convention, which nominated Grant for his second term, and the same year was elected to congress from that state at large by a majority of ten thousand over Gen. Alpheus Baker. In 1874 he was an unsuccessful candidate for congress. In 1875 he was sixth auditor of the United States treasury for the post office department, which he held until 1877, when he resigned and was appointed appraiser of merchandise for the port of Mobile. He served in this capacity until 1878, when he was appointed assistant collector of internal revenue for the State of Alabama and served until the inauguration of Cleveland. Married: January 27, 1887, to Mrs. Mary Anderson, nee Dickson, a lady of English ancestry. Residence: Mobile.

SHEEHAN, WILLIAM THOMAS, editor, was born January 8, 1874, at Eufaula, Barbour County; son of William Thomas and Emma (Garreth) Sheehan, the former also a native of Eufaula, but in 1878 removed to Birmingham, engaged in construction work with W. J. Keboe, and died there that year during an epidemic of cholera; grandson of Daniel T. and Martha Naomi (Ashurst) Sheehan, who located at Wetumpka but in 1850 removed to Eufaula, the former a native of Cork, Ireland, and of James M. and Mary Williams (Anderson) Garreth, also of Eufaula, the former being killed and scalped by the Indians in the Creek uprising of 1836, between old Monticello in Pike County and the Pea River; great-grandson of John and Frances (Hill) Ashurst, the former being one of the earliest settlers in Montgomery County, having in 1817, at the government sale held at Milledgeville, Ga., bought a large tract of land lying between the Three Mile Branch and Mount Meigs, where the following year he built the first frame house in the county, a structure that was still standing, in 1920, at the nine mile post; great-great-grandson of William and Phoebe (Flournoy) Hill, the former a Revolutionary soldier, who enlisted at the age of sixteen at Mannikin Town, in the Virginia militia, and served in that line throughout the war, afterwards went to Mennike Town, a French Huguenot settlement between Richmond and Petersburg, on the "Old Hundred Road," where he was married, moved finally to Edenton, Ga., where he died at the age of ninety. The Ashurst family was seated in Sussex, England, the American founder having come to this county in 1740. Captain Sheehan received his early education in private and public schools of Eufaula, and completed the high school course. In 1894 he was elected to the public school faculty and taught in the grammar grades until 1897, when he was elected assistant principal of the high school. He resigned from this position at the outbreak of the Spanish-American war, and was the first member of the "Eufaula Rifles," which company he had formerly assisted in organizing, to volunteer for service in the war. He served throughout that period as first sergeant, Co. G, 2nd Alabama regiment of volunteers. Twice he was elected to a lieutenancy of the company, and remained with the National Guard until 1907, when he retired as lieutenant-colonel. After returning home from active military service following the war, he decided to enter journalism and accepted reportorial work on the "Birmingham Age Herald." Later he became associated with Gov. W. D. Jelks in the "Eufaula Times and News," which the latter edited. In November, 1899, he came to Montgomery and was connected with the "Montgomery Journal," and in 1902 began work for the "Montgomery Advertiser." For two years he did reportorial work for that paper, being especially assigned to the capitol. In 1904 he became special correspondent; in 1907, assistant editor to Major W. W. Screws, holding that position until the latter's death in 1913 when he became editor-in-chief. In 1915, with Charles H. Allen, he bought the half interest in the paper owned by Frank P. Glass, and became president of the company, retaining its editorship. His early acquaintance with leading men of the State brought him in close touch with public affairs and made of him a student of events. Through his years of newspaper training, he entered upon the responsible duties of editing a great state daily with fine preparation. His paper holds a peculiar and unique position in that it has a larger following and exerts a more direct influence on its clientage, and is more widely quoted by the national press, than any other newspaper in the South. Fully alive to the importance of education to a citizenry, Captain Sheehan has been the consistent advocate of every movement or institution looking to that end. When the plans of a proposed department of archives and history were brought to his attention by Dr. Thomas M. Owen, founder and director of that department, he lent his full influence to its firm establishment and permanency and the popularization of history by his free will gift of publicity and editorial support. When the educational agencies of the State planned progressive reforms and it was necessary to amend the State constitution to levy taxes for that work, he not only wielded his clear and convincing pen for the cause, but at heavy expense to his paper, for a year or more maintained a special educational section of "The Advertiser." From 1911 to 1919, he was a member of the State normal school board, and took an active part in the advance of the teacher-training institutions during that time. He served as tax collector of Montgomery County, by appointment of Gov. Emmet O'Neal, from November, 1913, to September, 1917. He is a Democrat, and through his paper as well as his personal activities is a leader in his party. In 1904 he was electoral messenger to Washington. In his editorial work Captain Sheehan has devoted himself not only to politics and economy, but to history, literature, sociology and agriculture, the State's basic industry. He has sustained the fundamental truths of religion, morality and the basic virtues and has stood out against radicalism and senseless changes. He is a Presbyterian. Married: November 12, 1907, at "Oak Hill" plantation, Sumter County, to Elizabeth Houston, daughter of Charles Henry and Irene Houston (Park) Winston, of that place, a descendant of Isaac Winston, a Revolutionary soldier who is buried near Tusculumbia, and member of the family which produced Gov. John A. Winston, Senator Edmund W. Pettus, of Alabama, and Gov. John J. Pettus of Mississippi. Other representatives of the family have figured in the history of Virginia, Alabama, and North Carolina. Children: 1. Charles Winston; 2. William Thomas; 3. Anne Garrett; 4. Irene Houston. Residence: Montgomery.

SHEFFIELD, JAMES LAWRENCE, colonel 48th Alabama infantry regiment, C. S. Army, member Secession convention, and State senator, was born December 5, 1819, in Huntsville, and died July 2, 1892, in Montgomery; son of Nicholas and Mary (Martin) Sheffield respectively of Virginia and North Carolina, and who came to Huntsville in 1818, a carriage-maker. He was educated in the common schools of Madison County and in 1837 removed to Marshall County where he clerked in a store for four years at Claysville. Some years later he owned a well stocked plantation, operated by negro slaves. After the War of Secession he began merchandising, first at Guntersville and later at Warrenton, but discontinued this business in 1884. In 1886 he was a clerk in the State department of education and at the time of his death was in the employ of the Western railway of Alabama. He was a deputy sheriff at Claysville from 1844-47; member of the constitutional Conventions of 1861 and 1865; member of the Secession convention in 1860, and vigorously opposed secession, but when the ordinance was passed he signed it by instruction of his constituents and became at once one of the most zealous upholders of the Confederate cause. He represented Marshall County in the lower house of the legislature in 1855, 1857 and 1865, and as State senator in 1886, represented Marshall, Dekalb and Jackson Counties. While a member of the senate in 1886 he took an active stand in favor of an appropriation for the building of the Confederate monument in Montgomery and the success of the movement was largely due to his influence. He entered the Confederate service in 1861 as Lieutenant of Co. K, 9th Alabama infantry regiment, and was in time promoted to a captaincy. In April, 1862, he returned home with authority to raise a regiment. Within one month he raised the 48th Alabama infantry regiment at his own personal expense, fifty-seven thousand dollars in money. A part of this sum was afterward returned to him by the Confederate government, but as it was deposited in a Richmond bank he lost the entire amount when that city surrendered. He was unanimously elected colonel of this regiment which he led to Richmond without delay. He commanded Taliaferro's brigade for about eight months and led Law's brigade at Gettysburg and Chickamauga. At this last battle he was so injured by the concussion of a shell that by the advice of a board of surgeons he retired from the army, but he never ceased to labor for the Confederate cause. Col. Sheffield was a Democrat of the strongest convictions. He supported Douglas in the presidential campaign of 1860, and made numerous speeches in favor of that ticket. After the war he was a most bitter opponent of the fifteenth amendment and after reconstruction, in spite of Federal militarism he fearlessly canvassed the counties of north Alabama and everywhere made vehement speeches in behalf of the Democratic party. He was a member of the Masonic lodge at Warrenton; was many times its worshipful master, and on Masonic celebrations was often the orator of the day. Married: June 21, 1844, at Warrenton, to Mary Ann, widow of Rev. Oliver Day Street, and daughter of Thomas and Rebecca (Tate) Atkins, granddaughter of Abner Tate, a native of Kentucky, who removed to Hazel Green about 1809, in 1814 was appointed a member of the orphans' court of Madison County, of which Leroy Pope and Dr. David Monroe were at the same time members. Children: 1. Mary, m. Creed L. Taylor, at Guntersville; 2. Andrew Moore, a daughter, unmarried, Tuscaloosa; 3. James Bradley, Lauderdale; 4. Rebecca, dec., m. Alonzo S. Mitchell, Corsicana, Texas; 5. Lucinda, dec., m. John H. Fennell; 6. William Smith, Santa Anna, Calif. Last residence: Montgomery.

SHEILD, EDWIN, teacher and planter, was born December 27, 1810, in York County, Va., and died March 6, 1893, at Uniontown; son of Samuel and Maria (Drummond) Sheild, both natives of Virginia, the former who was a farmer, clerk of the superior and county court of York and Warwick Counties, Va.; grandson of Robert Sheild, a native of Virginia, and of John Drummond who came to Virginia from Scotland; great-grandson of Samuel Sheild, who was an early emigrant from England to Virginia. He was reared in York County, Va., and was graduated from William and Mary college, in Virginia, in 1830. He afterward studied law, but gave that up, and taught school. He came to Alabama in 1848, located first in Marengo County, and on November 27, 1853, removed to Perry County, and settled near Uniontown, where he purchased a plantation. He resided there for some time, managing his plantation and occasionally teaching a private school. He later removed to Uniontown where he retired from active life. He was a Democrat and a member of the Presbyterian Episcopal church. Married: November 27, 1853, to Mary Jane Semple, a native of New Kent County, Va.; daughter of James and Elizabeth (Miller) Semple, the former who was a native of Williamsburg, Va., and the latter of Goochland County, Va., and of Huguenot descent; granddaughter of Judge James Semple of the general court of Virginia and of Scotch descent. Children: 1. Mary S. Hungerford of Uniontown; 2. Edwin, Jr., b. December 16, 1856, was graduated A. B., and A. M., from the University of Alabama, 1878, cotton buyer at Montgomery, 1880-87, member of the firm of J. C. Graham & company, Cotton Exchange, New York, m. Mildred Christian, reside at Westfield, N. J.; and three other children who died in infancy. Last residence: Uniontown.

SHELburne, JAMES MADISON, Baptist minister, president of Howard college, was born May 27, 1867, at Little Mount, Spencer County, Ky.; son of John Wesley and Jennie (Goodwine) Shelburne, the former who was a native of Southville, Shelby County, Ky., lived at Little Mount, was a farmer, tax assessor for his county, and district magistrate for a long term of years, and whose ancestors came from England and settled first in Virginia; grandson of James M. and Pauline (Ashley) Shelburne, who lived at Southville, Shelby County, Ky., and of Elias and Eliza M. Goodwine, who lived near Taylorsville, Ky.; great-grandson of Augustus Shelbourne, who was a soldier in the Revolutionary War, and immediately after the war removed to Shelby County. He attended the public schools in Spencer County, Ky., and a private school in Taylorsville, under the instruction of Mrs. G. W. Overstreet. He attended Georgetown college, at Kentucky, and was graduated 1897, M. A. He received the degree of Th. M., 1900, from the Southern theological seminary, after three years' work, and in 1907, the degree of D. D. was conferred upon him by Georgetown college. He was president of Howard college, 1912-18, and previous to this time had served as pastor of two churches. Married: June 27, 1900, at Birmingham, to Martha W. Crumpton, daughter of Rev. W. B. and Ellen C. Crumpton (q. v.). Children: 1. Kingman Cody; 2. Ellen Bryan; 3. James Crumpton; 4. Harriette Mathilde; 5. Mary Frances. Residence: Gadsden.

SHELBY, DAVID, physician in Madison County, where he practiced for more than forty years; grandfather of Judge David Shelby (q. v.).

SHELBY, DAVID DAVIE, lawyer, State senator and U. S. circuit judge, was born October 24, 1847, in Madison County, and died in 1914, at Huntsville; son of Dr. David and Mary Tabitha (Bouldin) Shelby, who practiced medicine in Madison County for over forty years; grandson of Anthony Bledsoe and Marian (Winchester) Shelby, who lived at Dixon Springs, Tenn., Galveston, Tex., and Brandon, Miss., and was one of the supreme court judges of the republic of Texas, 1840-44, and of William Graves and Bettie (Hammond) Bouldin, who lived in Madison County and in Washington County, Tex., a descendant of Col. Thomas Bouldin of the colony of Virginia; great-grandson of David and Sarah (Bledsoe) Shelby, a native of Virginia, soldier of the Revolution, in the command of his kinsman, Col. Isaac Shelby, fought at King's Mountain, N. C., and was afterwards a member from Sumner County, of Tennessee's first constitution convention; of Mayor John Shelby and of Anthony Bledsoe; great-great-grandson of Evan Shelby who emigrated from Wales and settled in Maryland. Judge Shelby was educated at home by his parents except a short attendance at a country school taught by W. B. Murphy and the Rev. Joseph R. Morris. His ambition to enter college was interrupted by the War of Secession. He studied law at Cumberland university, Lebanon, Tenn., under Professors Robert L. Caruthers and Nathan Green; was admitted to the practice in the Alabama courts, April, 1870, at Huntsville, and was partner successively with Gen. Leroy Pope Walker, 1875-82, Hon. William Richardson, Judge Richard W. Walker, Hon. R. E. Spragins and Hon. Shelby S. Pleasants. He was city attorney of Huntsville, 1874; member Alabama State senate, 1882-86; appointed U. S. circuit judge, March 3, 1899, and entered upon his duties as judge of the U. S. circuit court of appeals, for the 5th circuit. Owing to his youth he was not regularly enlisted in the Confederate Army, but served four months with the 4th Alabama cavalry regiment, in a Georgia campaign. He was a Republican in politics but held no official position in the party organization. He was connected with no church. Married: August 8, 1872, in Huntsville, to Eason, daughter of Zebulon Pike and Wilhametta (Eason) Davis of that place; granddaughter of Nicholas Davis, a native of Virginia, a distinguished leader of the Whig party in Alabama, and president of the Alabama State senate for several years, a descendant of John Davis, a soldier of the American Revolution. There were no children. Last residence: Huntsville.

SHELDON, LESLIE B., lawyer, was born November 27, 1855, at Mobile; son of Thomas Franklin and Sarah Frances (Bragg) Sheldon, the former who was a native of Pawtucket, Providence County, R. I., removed to Ohio, and from there to Greensboro, and afterwards to Mobile, was a bookkeeper, and kept books for the C. S. government at Mobile during the War of Secession, and after the war engaged as a partner in the firm of Parker Lake & Company, a cotton commission and wholesale grocery business, the latter a native of Washington, N. C.; grandson of Christopher and Amelia (Holmes) Sheldon, the former who was a native of Pawtucket, R. I., and of Thomas and Priscilla (Pope) Bragg, who lived in Washington, N. C., and then in Greensboro; great-grandson of Remington and Hulda (Green) Sheldon, and of Joseph and Frances Bragg, the former who was a descendant of the Bragg family of North Carolina, from which Gen. He received his education in the public and private schools of Mobile, until he was fifteen years of age, and at the age of seventeen began to read law in the office of Judge Alexander McKinstry of Mobile. On November 9, 1875, he was admitted to the bar in the Mobile city court; to the circuit court on January 21, 1878;

to the supreme court of Alabama, on November 8, 1880; and to the U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals for the fifth circuit, in March, 1891. In 1880, he was elected as a Democrat to the state legislature from Mobile County; in 1886, was elected by the general assembly, solicitor for Mobile County, which office he held for six years. In 1896, he was re-elected to the State legislature, and during this session served on the committees of revisions of laws, local legislation, and appropriations. In the same year he was a candidate for the Democratic nomination to congress, but was defeated. He was appointed by the district court of the United States, as U. S. commissioner for the southern district of Alabama, which position he resigned after holding it a few months. He then commenced the practice of law in Mobile. He was for many years an official member of the Methodist Episcopal church, but is now a communicant of the Episcopal church, Trinity parish. He is an Odd Fellow. SHELLEY, CHARLES MILLER, lawyer, brigadier-general, C. S. Army, sheriff, representative in congress, and fourth auditor U. S. treasury, was born December 28, 1833, in Sullivan County, Tenn., and died January 19, 1907, in Birmingham; son of William Percy and Margaret (Etter) Shelley, the former a native of Guilford Court House, N. C., moved to Sullivan County, Tenn., finally removing to Alabama and locating in Talladega where he was a contractor and builder; brother of James B. Shelley, lieutenant-colonel of the 10th Alabama infantry regiment, who was killed at Petersburg, and of Nathan Shelley, lawyer, member of state legislature from Talladega County, 1851, and 1853, removed to Texas, attorney general, 1862, and brigadier-general, Texas state troops, War of Secession; great-grandson of John Shelley, who came from England and settled in North Carolina. General Shelley received a limited education, and early in life he learned the trade of architect and builder. In February, 1861, he enlisted in the C. S. Army, as lieutenant, serving at Fort Morgan and Mobile. After six weeks service, this company returned to Talladega, was re-organized and he was commissioned, April 2, 1861, as captain of Co. E, subsequently known as Co. B, 5th Alabama infantry regiment. This regiment was ordered to Virginia where it served for one year. On January 31, 1862, he was appointed colonel, temporary rank, and assigned to duty with the 30th Alabama infantry regiment. From this date he shared the military services of this regiment. He took part in the first battle of Bull Run, Port Gibson, Baker's Creek, was captured at Vicksburg, July 4, 1863, and paroled at the same place on July 8. His clothes were rent by seven balls on the field at Baker's Creek and he received special praise from General Lee for his conduct in this battle. He again took command of his regiment and served in the battles of Lookout Mountain, Missionary Ridge, Rocky Face Ridge, Resaca, Marietta, Atlanta, Jonesboro and all the battles in the Georgia campaign. He took command of Cumming's brigade the day after the battle at Jonesboro, remaining in command for one month. On September 23, 1864, he was appointed brigadier-general, temporary rank, to rank from September 17, 1864, and in December it was made permanent. General Shelley commanded Canby's old brigade, the 17th, 26th and 29th Alabama, and the 37th Mississippi, in Walthall's division, under Hood, in the Tennessee campaign. General Hood said that the strategy of General Shelley saved Stuart's corps from capture at Franklin. He and his brigade were again distinguished at the battles of Hillsboro pike and Nashville, and in 1865, they were ordered to Danville, in order to protect the stores. Shortly afterwards the decimated Alabama regiments of Scott's, Quarles', and Lowrey's brigades were united and these twelve regiments were placed under his command. The surrender occurring about the time he returned to Alabama, located in Selma, and resumed his business. He held the office of sheriff for two years. He was elected as a Democrat to the Forty-fifth and Forty-sixth congresses, March 4, 1877-March 3, 1881; presented credentials as a member-elect to the forty-seventh congress, but the election was contested by James Q. Smith, and the seat declared vacant, July 20, 1882; subsequently elected to fill vacancy thus caused, and served from November 7, 1882, to March 3, 1883; presented credentials as a member of the forty-eighth congress, and served until January 9, 1885, when he was succeeded by George H. Craig, who contested his election. President Cleveland appointed him fourth auditor of the treasury which office he held for four years. He was also a member of the law firm of Shelley, Butler and Martin. After a few years he removed to Birmingham, residing in that city until his death. He was a Methodist, Mason, and Odd Fellow. Married: (1) June 15, 1866, to Kathleen, and later in life, (2) Ann Olivia, both daughters of Felix Grundy McConnell (q. v.). Children: 1. McConnell, deceased; 2. James Etter, special student, University of Alabama, 1894-95; captain, 5th volunteer regiment, Spanish-American War, July, 1898-May 31, 1899, chief inspector, Civil guard, Santiago de Cuba; appointed lieutenant, U. S. Army, 1901; captain, 11th Cavalry, U. S. Army, 1913; m. Christine Roosevelt; 3. Elizabeth. Last residence: Birmingham.

SHELTON, JULIA (FINLEY), deceased author.

SHELTON, MASON BRADFORD, merchant, was born February 27, 1838, in Jackson County; son of William F. and Elizabeth (Wood) Shelton, the former who came to Alabama with his parents in 1827, being one of the early settlers of Jackson County, the latter who was a native of Tennessee. His education was obtained in the common schools of the county, and for eight months of each year, for ten years, he taught school in Jackson County and vicinities. The rest of the time he spent in stores, posting books and clerking. Because of ill health, he was unable to enter active service in the C. S. Army, but in 1862, he went to Gen. Pillow at Huntsville, who sent him to Dr. Stout at Chattanooga, where he was assigned to duty at Ringgold, Ga., to fill a vacancy in a Confederate hospital. He remained there for some time in the capacity of nurse, and was then appointed private secretary to Dr. Curry, surgeon in charge of the Ford hospital, of which he became steward. Later, having regained his health, he was sent to Shelbyville, Tenn., where he joined the Fourth Confederate Tennessee infantry, and forty days after joining his regiment, while with Gen. Bragg on his retreat from Tennessee, he was captured. Being dressed in citizen's clothes he was taken for a spy, and was sent to Camp Chase, Ohio, where he was imprisoned for twenty-two months, and it was only through the intervention of U. S. senator Powell, later governor of Kentucky, with President Abraham Lincoln, that he was released, his discharge being signed by the president himself. He then went to Henderson, Ky., and engaged as a salesman for Soper & Dallam, merchants, and remained there three months. At the close of the war he returned to Jackson County, and accepted a position in a store with his cousin, C. C. Shelton, now of Chattanooga, Tenn., and remained there until January 1, 1867. He then started to the mining camps of the Rocky Mountains, and after six weeks reached Denver, and from there went to Georgetown. He returned to Alabama, about nine years later, bought out the firm he had previously worked for, and engaged in the mercantile business at Larkinsville. He lost his store by fire, December 23, 1880, and in 1881, moved to Florence, where he formed a partnership with John H. Young, the firm name being Shelton & Young, and a few months later opened up another store in partnership with a Mr. Ragsdale, under the name of Shelton & Ragsdale. After eighteen months, he dissolved his partnership with Mr. Young, and continued in the other firm. Mr. Ragsdale retired from the business about 1885, and since then Mr. Shelton has conducted the business by himself. He was one of the organizers of the Merchant's Bank of Florence, which was opened in 1892, and has been vice-president and a member of its board of directors. He is a Mason. Married: on February 23, 1875, to Endora Pittman. Children: 1. Effie, d. in infancy; 2. Lida G.; 3. Alta P. Residence: Florence.

SHERARD, FRANK ROSS, physician; graduate of the medical department of the University of Pennsylvania, 1894; licensed to practice by the county board of Mobile, the same year. Residence: Mobile.

SHERER, JOHN MADISON, lawyer, was born June 7, 1874, at Dry Creek, Fayette County; son of Jonathan D. and Mary (Eason) Sherer, the former a native of near York, York District, S. C., who removed to Alabama, settling first in Walker, later at Dry Creek, Fayette County, and was of the nine men who were first from that county to offer their services to the Confederate cause, walking to Moulton from Jasper to join the army, was captured at Franklin, Tenn., and carried to Black Island prison; in 1916 was county commissioner of Fayette County; grandson of Thomas and Jane Sherer who lived at Jasper from 1856 to 1884, and of Harrison and Mary Eason, of Dry Creek; great-grandson of William Sherer, who located in York, S. C., about 1800. The founder of the family in America was John Christopher Sherer, who came to this country, October 13, 1709, from Hundsrück, on the west side of the Rhine River. When eighteen years of age, left home on the ship "Minerva," commanded by Captain Arnold. He settled in Reading, Pa., where he married Julianna Philippi, the first female child born in that place. He was a sergeant in Washington's Continental Army and was wounded at the battle of the Brandywine. He was one of the immortal eleven hundred who crossed the Delaware River with General Washington, in spite of the ice. The following morning the battle of Trenton Heights was fought. His two sons were John and Jonathan. Mr. Sherer received his early education in the public schools of his community, often taught in cabins and country churches, as was the custom a quarter of a century ago. He attended high school at Fayette, and studied law at the University of Alabama; admitted to the bar at Fayette, 1896; entered upon the practice at Gainesville, where he remained for two years, removed to Ensley in 1899, and to Jasper in 1900; solicitor of Walker County, 1904-05; city attorney, 1906. Army, resigned and served on the staff of Gen. Albert Sidney Johnston, wounded at the battle of Shiloh, served during the remainder of the war as major, in charge of the quartermaster department and in the army of Gen. Joseph E. Johnston; granddaughter of Turner Reavis, planter, circuit judge of Sumter County prior to the War of Secession, who resided at Gainesville. Children: 1. John M., jr. Residence: Jasper.

SHERMAN, ELOISE LEE, deceased author and writer.

SHERMAN, SAMUEL STERLING, educator, was born November 24, 1815, at Rupert, Bennington County, Vt., and died November 23, 1914, at Chicago, Ill.; son of Sterling and Jane (Noble) Sherman the former who was a native of Sandgate, Bennington County, Vt., lived at West Rupert, Vt., engaged in farming, and represented the county in the State legislature; grandson of Enoch and Catherine (Seeley) Sherman of Sandgate, Vt., the former who served in the Revolutionary War under Lafayette, and witnessed the execution of Major Andre, and the latter who was a small girl at the time the British invaded Connecticut, her native state, and whose father was killed in the Revolutionary War, and of Luke and Mary (McCleary) Noble, the former who was a native of Southwick, Mass., and served in the Revolutionary War with Ethan Allen and his Green Mountain boys, on the western frontier; great-grandson of Josiah and Miriam (Gregory) Sherman; great-great-grandson of Enos and Abigail (Walker) Sherman; great-great-great-grandson of Benjamin and Rebekah (Phippany) Sherman; great-great-great-grandson of Samuel and Sarah (Mitchell) Sherman, the former who came to America with his parents when he was fourteen years of age, and in 1650, settled in Stratford, Conn.; a descendant of Henry and Agnes (Butler) Sherman, the former who was a native of Dedham, Essex County, England, who died in 1589, and of Thomas Noble, the progenitor of the Noble family in America, who was born in England, in 1632, later came to America, and settled in Westfield, Mass., and married Hannah Wariner, a native of Westfield, Mass. He was related to Senator John Sherman, and Gen. W.

PORTER BIBB

T. Sherman, who were lineal descendants of Samuel Sherman, and also to Roger Sherman, a signer of the Declaration of Independence, and Senator Sherman, of Connecticut, who were descended from a collateral branch. His early education was received at Salem, N. Y., New Hampton, N. H., and Bennington, Vt., where he was prepared for college, and he later entered Middlebury college, Middlebury, Vt., where he was graduated, A. B., in 1838, later receiving the degrees of A. M., and LL. D. Soon afterward he went to Tuscaloosa, where he opened a private school, preparatory to the university. He continued the private school for sometime until he was elected tutor in ancient languages at the University of Alabama, by the board of trustees at their annual meeting on the suggestion of Dr. Manly, president of the university. He at first declined the honor, but later accepted, also serving as librarian, and having as private pupils the sons of Dr. Manly and Prof. Pratt. When the Baptists of Alabama were endeavoring to lay the foundation of an institution that should become a college or university in the control of that denomination, and solicited his aid, he resigned his duties at the university, which he had served for three years, and went to Marion, in 1842, where he established an English and classical school with nine boys as students. The school grew rapidly and soon a chair of theology was endowed; in 1847, regular college classes were organized; and in 1848, a class of seven young men was graduated, after which the institution assumed the name and the privileges conferred by its charter, Howard college, with Dr. Sherman as president. Ten years later, he resigned the presidency, and went to LaGrange, Ga., where he had purchased a private institution known as Brownwood. After the retirement of Prof. Jewett, as principal of the Judson female institute, in 1858, he sold Brownwood, and returned to Marion, where he assumed the principalship of the institute. In 1859, he resigned from this charge, and settled in Milwaukee, Wis. The War of Secession soon followed, and he was permitted by the Federal authorities to administer to the prisoners at Camp Douglas and Johnson's Island.

Dr. Sherman served for many years on the city board of education of Milwaukee, on the Wisconsin state board of normal school regents, was also a trustee and for a short time, principal of the Milwaukee female college. He was offered the presidency of the University of Wisconsin, on its organization in 1866, but declined. He was for some time president of the National Bank of Beaver Dam, and in April, 1866, became a partner in the firm of West & Company, booksellers of Milwaukee. In 1867, his friend Dr. M. P. Jewett, former president of the Judson female institute, originator and first president of Vassar college, resigned from the presidency of that college and removed to Milwaukee. Associating with themselves another business man, Dr. Sherman and Dr. Jewett formed a co-partnership, under the firm name of Jewett & Sherman, dealers in tea, coffee, and spices. The members of the firm were increased in time, and the firm was changed to a joint stock corporation, under the name of the Jewett & Sherman Company. Dr. Sherman withdrew from this corporation in 1878, moved to Chicago, and established the firm of Sherman Brothers & Company, and in 1898, transferring both the firm name and the assets to others, he retired from business. He was a member of the LaSalle Avenue Baptist church, Chicago. Married: on August 19, 1845, at Philadelphia, Pa., to Eliza Dewey, daughter of William and Hannah (Bond) Dewey, of Augusta, Me., granddaughter of Henry and Hannah (Stearns) Bond; great-granddaughter of Capt. Phineas Stearns, who served as a soldier at Lake George in 1756, and was a member of the Boston Tea Party, and of William Bond, who was a lieutenant-colonel at the battle of Bunker Hill, and the colonel being killed, succeeded to the command of the regiment and was sent on the unfortunate invasion of Canada, by way of the lakes and after his return, died in camp at Mount Independence, August 3, 1776; great-great-granddaughter of Josiah Stearns; great-great-great-granddaughter of John Stearns; great-great-great-great-granddaughter of Isaac Stearns, who was the progenitor of the Stearns family in America, and who came to this county, in 1630, in the same ship with Gov. Winthrop, and Sir Richard Saltonstall. Children: 1. Henry Bond, m. Emma Lancey. Children, Henry Lancey and Emma Louisa, Pasadena, Calif.; 2. Elizabeth Jane, Chicago, Ill.; 3. Frederick Sterling, m. Evelyn Hardin, children, Annie Hardin, Elizabeth Evelyn, and Samuel, Chicago. Last residence: Chicago.

SHERROD, BENJAMIN, planter and railroad builder, was born January 21, 1786, in Halifax County, N. C., and died February, 1857, at Courtland; son of Isaac and Mary (Ricks) Sherrod of Halifax, N. C., who died four months before the birth of his son, his wife, who was a widow Copeland before marrying Mr. Sherrod, dying soon afterwards. He was reared by his grandfather Ricks. The Sherrods were of English stock and were among the first settlers of North Carolina. He was educated at Chapel Hill, N. C., and after graduation engaged in planting; moved to Wilkes County, Ga., where he again followed planting. In 1818, he came to Alabama and established plantations in the Tennessee Valley that were worked by seven hundred slaves. He accumulated his wealth solely by planting, as he never speculated. His plows moved abreast like a company of cavalry in a charge. The foreman with a mule of average speed set the gait, the fast mules being kept back, and the slow ones speeded up. He was one of the few men who used clover in this valley as a renovator. He wasted nothing which could maintain the fertility of the soil. Apart from his reputation as a great cotton planter "Colonel" Sherrod should be remembered as one who, in 1832, promoted the first Alabama railroad and the third built in the United States, the Tuscumbia-Courtland railroad, which afterwards became a part of the Memphis and Charleston railroad. He was president of the board of directors and when the road proved a financial failure he paid the debt of the corporation, five hundred thousand dollars, as he had endorsed all its papers. He continued so prosperous in his planting operations that he bequeathed to each of his children a fine plantation well stocked with negroes. During the Indian War of 1813, he was an army contractor with the commissary department, and supplied the Georgia troops with provisions. From this service he acquired the title of colonel. He was a Whig in his politics but never was a candidate for any office. Married: (1) Eliza, daughter of Samuel and Nellie Watkins of Wilkes County, Ga., the former a merchant of Petersburg, Va., and subsequently a large planter on Broad River, Ga.; (2) in 1822, to Tabitha, daughter of John and Ann (Freeman) Goode of Edgefield, S. C. Children: by the first wife, 1. Felix; 2. Frederick; 3. Antoinette; 4. Samuel; by the second wife, 5. Eliza, died young; 6. Adelaide, m. Col. Samuel W. Shackelford, son of Capt. Jack Shackelford who commanded the "Red Rovers" who were massacred at Goliad, Texas; 7. Charles Fox, m. Susan Billups of Columbus, Miss; 8. William Crawford, m. Amanda Morgan, of Nashville, Tenn. Last residence: Courtland.

SHERROD, CHARLES MORGAN, lawyer and editor, was born October 1, 1860, at Courtland, Lawrence County; son of William C. and Amanda (Morgan) Sherrod; grandson of Benjamin and Tabitha (Goode) Sherrod, the former emigrated to Lawrence County in 1818, settling four miles north of Courtland near an Indian village, known as "Gourdtown," largely built, and was the first president of the Tusculum and Courtland railroad, now a part of the Memphis division of the Southern railway, and of Samuel D. and Matilda (McIntosh) Morgan, who lived in Nashville, Tenn. He was educated in the schools of Town Creek, then Jonesboro, and Courtland; attended the old Agricultural & mechanical college, 1878-79; graduated in the law school at Lebanon, Tenn., June, 1880. He began the practice of law at Courtland in 1884; was at Moulton, 1886-1894; spent 1894-1899 in Texas, where he was appointed judge of the district court, Wichita County, 1896; mayor of Courtland, 1902-1906; chairman Democratic Committee, Lawrence County, 1890-94; delegate to state conventions, 1890-94, 1900 and 1906; member house of representatives from Lawrence County, 1907, and of senate from the second district in 1911 and 1913. Editor: "Courtland Enterprise," 1899-1900; "Franklin Times," 1901. He is a Democrat; and a Knight of Pythias. Married: September 24, 1890, to Helen, daughter of John Rush and Lou (Foster) Gates. Children: 1. Adylise; 2. Miriam; 3. Morgan. Residence: Courtland.

SHERROD, WILLIAM CRAWFORD, planter and congressman, was born August 17, 1831, at the Cotton Garden plantation, in Lawrence County; son of Benjamin and Tabitha (Goode) Sherrod (q. v.). His first education was given by governesses in his father's house, and he was prepared for college by Mr. McClintock, of Edgefield, S. C., completing his education at Chapel Hill, N. C. He returned home and entered upon the life of a cotton planter in Alabama and Desha County, Arkansas, owning a large plantation with numerous slaves in each state. On the surrender of Arkansas post, during the War of Secession, he had one thousand bales of cotton on his Arkansas plantation which he burned to prevent it falling into the hands of the enemy. He represented Lawrence County in the lower house in the legislature of 1859, 1860, and was one of the three men who refused to sign the ordinance of secession. In 1879 he was a state senator and a member of the finance committee. He was a delegate to the Charleston and Baltimore conventions in 1860, supported Stephen H. Douglas in each convention, and canvassed for him in the campaign that followed. He was a member of the forty-first congress, where he indulged in no political discussion, but devoted his time to the advancement of internal improvements. He was on the committee on railroads and canals, and carried through successfully the Southern Pacific railroad bill. Notwithstanding his opposition to secession, when it became an accomplished fact, like all true Southern men he threw himself heartily into the Confederate cause. He was appointed captain commissary for Patterson's brigade of cavalry, with which he remained until the close of the war, sharing in all its hardships, privations, skirmishes and battles. After the war he returned to plantation life. He made his home in Florence, 1883, for the purpose of educating his children, and he formulated the Florence boom, being one of the originators of the Florence land and mining co.; the W. B. Wood furnace co., of which he was vice-president; the Florence coal, coke and iron co.; the Florence, Tuscaloosa and Montgomery railroad co.; and the Tennessee and Alabama railroad; the Alabama, Florence & Cincinnati railway; and the Florence and St. Louis railroad. He is a Catholic. Married: October 21, 1856, in Nashville, to Amanda, daughter of Samuel and Matilda (McIntosh) Morgan. Samuel Morgan was an uncle of Gen. John T. Morgan and cousin of H. J. T. Morgan of Alabama. Children: 1. Charles M., m. Helen Gates, Courtland; 2. William C., Jr., unmarried, Wichita Falls, Texas; 3. St. Clair; 4. Lillian, m. Charles B. Loney, Wichita Falls, Texas; 5. Benjamin, m. Marietta Jones, El Paso, Texas; 6. Lucile, Wichita Falls, Texas; 7. Eugene, m. Virginia Withers, Wichita Falls, Texas. Last residence: Wichita Falls, Texas.

SHERROD, WILLIAM LOWNDES YANCEY, farmer, was born February 10, 1858, near Marr's Hill, Lauderdale County; son of McHenry Irwin and Agnes Elizabeth (Hoge) Sherrod, the former who was born near Oakland, where he lived throughout his entire life, was a farmer, enlisted as private in Co. I, Thirty-fifth Alabama infantry regiment, C. S. Army, was captured at Vicksburg; grandson of Robert and Elizabeth (Lassiter) Sherrod, who lived near Oakland, removing here from Northampton County, N. C., in 1819, the former who was of Irish ancestry, and of Hiram J. and Mary Elizabeth (Rice) Hoge, who lived near Marr's Hill. W. L. Y. Sherrod was educated in the schools of Lauderdale County and after completing his education engaged in farming, which occupation he has followed throughout his life. He was local school trustee; registrar of elections, 1911-18; volunteered for army service during the World War and was assigned to Battery B, Seventy-first coast artillery, went to France in September, 1918, and was mustered out in March, 1919; member of the house of representatives from Lauderdale County, 1919. He is a Democrat; a member of the Christian church; and a Woodman of the World. Married: On August 29, 1888, near Oakland, to Dora J. Cantrell, daughter of Lee T. and Mary (Pullen) Cantrell, who lived in Lawrence County, Tenn., the former who was of Scotch descent and followed the profession of teaching. Children: 1. Mary Agnes; 2. William L. Gordon; 3. Alta. Residence: Florence.

SHIELDS, BENJAMIN GLOVER, member Alabama legislature, congressman, and U. S. representative to Venezuela, was born about 1808, probably in Abbeville District, S. C. His father, Samuel B. Shields, was an early settler in Clarke County, where his son passed his boyhood days. There is no record of his early life but he evidently had good opportunities for obtaining a fair education and a thorough training in the legal profession. The time of his becoming a planter in Marengo County is also unknown. He represented the county as a Democrat in the legislature in 1835, 1836, 1837, 1838, and was during part of that time speaker of the house. In 1841 he was elected to congress from the Mobile District and served one term. A few years later President Polk appointed him U. S. minister to Venezuela, and he was abroad for a number of years. In 1851, his friends brought him out as a candidate for governor against Henry W. Collier, but the latter was elected by a large majority. About 1854 he removed to Texas, and for a few years took an active part in the politics of his adopted state. The year of his death is not known. Married: Sarah Thomas Harwell. A son, Samuel Roland Shields, born November 2, 1837, was first lieutenant Cook's artillery, C. S. Army, and died in the military service at Galveston, September 4, 1864. Last residence: Texas.

SHIELDS, JOHN B., judge and member of Alabama legislature, was born August 25, 1840, at Marshall's Ferry, Granger County, Tenn.; son of Dr. Milton and Priscilla (Bradson) Shields, the former was born in Green County, Tenn., in 1804, and died in Sevier County, Tenn., December 20, 1866, owner of paper mills at Marshall's Ferry and at Middlebrook, near Knoxville, in the '30's and '40's and at the same time had an interest in an iron furnace, who made all the writing and printing paper used in all the contiguous Southern counties, much of which was shipped down the Tennessee River, this paper was at first made by hand, one sheet being moulded at a time; grandson of James Shields, who was of Irish descent. Judge Shields attended the old field schools of his neighborhood until he was fifteen years of age, when he was sent to Greenville college where he pursued his studies two years. His medical studies were brought to a close by the outbreak of the War of Secession. After the war he merchandised eighteen months in Newnan, Ga., then returned to his old Tennessee home, which he found in ruins. After rebuilding the old homestead, still in possession of some of the family, he became a clerk in Morristown. In 1868 he moved to the terminus of the Cincinnati, Cumberland Gap and Charleston railroad at Wolf Creek, and there for three years was a merchant and station agent. In 1872 he moved to Carroll County, Ga., to superintend the Georgia paper manufacturing company, as he had become familiar with paper making in early life. Two years later he moved to Walker county, where he became a merchant and a miller. After three years he sold out his interest, moved to South Lowell, and there operated a steam saw and planing mill, which he conducted individually for ten years. He was elected to the legislature in 1878 on the Greenback ticket, but was not seated. In 1844 he was again elected to the legislature as an Independent and served in 1884-85. In 1866 he was elected probate judge of Walker County. He was first lieutenant in Co. I, 59th Tennessee infantry regiment C. S. Army, which organization was in the siege and surrender of Vicksburg, but was soon paroled, and later mounted with a cavalry regiment, part of Gen. J. C. Vaughn's brigade. His brigade made a campaign in 1864 in Maryland under General Early, and afterwards operated in western Virginia and east Tennessee. In these latter campaigns Judge Shields served as captain of his company. He was engaged in the battles of Grand Gulf, the siege of Vicksburg, Baker's Creek, Piedmont, Morristown, Bull's Gap, Monocacy Junction and Winchester. He is a Presbyterian; and a Mason. Married: September 19, 1866, in Carrollton, Ga., to Carrie E., youngest daughter of Judge John Long, a native of Tennessee who settled in Carroll County, Ga., in 1826, and there served as judge, legislator, and in other offices for more than twenty-five years. Children: 1. Nannie P.; 2. Lily Lou, deceased; 3. Carrie May; 4. Maud; 5. John B. Residence: Jasper.

SHIVERS, JESSE B., lawyer, major, probate judge, superintendent of education of Perry County, veteran C. S. Army, was born April 27, 1839, in Marengo County; son of Dr. Orlando Lunsford and Catherine (Woodfin) Shivers, the former from North Carolina who served in the Mexican War, the latter a cousin of Col. John H. Mosly, and kinsman of the McLaurin family, of colonial distinction. He received his higher education in Howard College, from which he graduated in June, 1859. He taught a private school in Wilcox County for about a year; after which he attended Cumberland University, where he was pursuing his law studies at the outbreak of the War of Secession. In 1863 he was admitted to the bar; elected mayor of Marion and held the office for four years, at the end of which time, 1867, he was ousted by the carpetbaggers. Later he was elected mayor and remained in that office about six years. From 1876 to 1886

he was superintendent of education of Perry County, and in 1887, was elected probate judge and re-elected in 1892. In 1861 he enlisted in Co. K, Eighth Alabama infantry regiment, but was subsequently transferred to the 11th infantry regiment, with which he fought during the days around Richmond. He received seven severe wounds at Frazer's Farm, one of which resulted in the amputation of his left arm. This was done on the field and was so unsuccessful that he had to submit to a second amputation at the hospital. He was brought home by his father and was eleven months in recovering. Married: June, 1871, to Maria L. Robinson, of Huntsville. Children: 1. Kate M., m. O. B. Ward; 2. Fanny Otey; 3. James B.; 4. Augusta; 5. Walter O. Last residence: Marion.

SHIVERS, ORLANDO LUNSFORD, Jr., physician, was born May 24, 1849, at Marion, Perry County; son of Dr. Orlando Lunsford and Catherine (Woodfin) Shivers and brother of Jesse B. Shivers (q. v.). He received his education in Howard college from which he was graduated, June 27, 1867; taught school for a brief period at Hickory, Miss., but returned to Alabama and farmed for three years near Marion. He studied medicine under Dr. E. B. Thompson until he entered Tulane university, graduating from the medical department in 1873. He first practiced in Perry County and later, for nine years, at Newbern, Hale County. In 1885 he returned to Marion which henceforth was his permanent home. In 1886 he was instrumental in organizing the Alabama surgical and gynecological association, from which a year later was evolved the Southern surgical and gynecological association. In 1888 he devised a treatment for hemorrhoids, which dispenses with the use of the knife and was endorsed by many able physicians and surgeons as the best appliance ever invented for this purpose. He is a member of several medical societies or associations, among them the American medical association. He is a member of the board of trustees of the public schools and is part owner of the Marion oil mills. He is a Baptist. Married: in 1875, to Minnie, daughter of Jack F. Cöcke. Five children, two sons and three daughters were born of this union. Residence: Marion.

SHOCKLEY, THOMAS BASCOM, timber merchant, was born October 17, 1844, at Meridian, Miss., and died in 1876, in Milton, Fla.; son of William Martin and Lydia (Bascom) Shockley, natives respectively of Sheffield and London, England, the former a Methodist minister for forty years. He was educated in a military school at Greensboro, and as a cadet at the University of Alabama, being captain of a mixed company of cadets and young men who served as escort to Gen. Wirt Adams, C. S. Army. After the war he was a bookkeeper and later a timber merchant. He was a Methodist; and a Mason. Married: October 27, 1871, at Milton, Fla., to Mary Janette, daughter of William Washington and Maria (Cotton) Harrison, of that place, originally from Virginia, the former a first cousin to President William Henry SHOMO, JOSEPH, U. S. army officer and planter, was born December 27, 1790, in Berkes County, Pa., and died in Pensacola, Fla., February 27, 1853. His father, whose name is not preserved by Alabama descendants, removed from Pennsylvania to near New Market, Va., 1801, and when his son, Joseph, was nineteen years of age he joined the army during the War of 1812, being elected captain of his company, Col. James P. Preston's regiment. He was ensign, March 12, 1812; 3rd lieutenant March 20, 1813; 2nd lieutenant March 24, 1814; transferred to 4th infantry, May 17, 1815; 1st lieutenant December 31, 1818; captain, March 1, 1819. Later he was stationed in Alabama after the war, resigned from the army, December 31, 1820, and purchased a farm in Clarke County, his residence, however, being at Mt. Pleasant, Monroe County. He was an Odd Fellow, a Democrat and a Methodist. Married: December 25, 1821, at the head of Perdido River, to Rosanah, daughter of Charles and Sehoy (McGilvary) Weatherford of Mount Pella, Baldwin County, and sister of William Weatherford (q. v.), the Creek Indian chief. She attended neighborhood schools until sixteen years of age, after which she was taken by her half brother, David Tate (q. v.), to Raleigh, N. C., and kept there in school for two years. She was a descendant of Sehoy Marchand, the princess of the "tribe of the wind," the ruling family of the Creek Indians, with their village at the confluence of the Tallapoosa and Coosa Rivers. She was a Methodist. Children: 1. David Tate, physician; 2. Joseph Weatherford, physician; 3. James Preston; 4. Francis William; 5. Virginia Elizabeth; 6. William Augustus; 7. Francis Blount. SHOOK, R. D., Cumberland Presbyterian minister; living in 1913. Residence: Scottsboro.

SHORES, J. W., Methodist minister, who lived to a great age, and served charges and pastorates in Alabama from ante-bellum days until recent times. Deceased. Last residence: Montgomery.

SHORTER, ELI SIMS, lawyer, representative in congress, and colonel C. S. Army, was born March 15, 1823, in Montevallo, Ga., and died in Eufaula, April 29, 1879; son of Gen. Reuben C. and Mary Butler (Gill) Shorter (q. v.), brother of Gov. John G. Shorter (q. v.). He received his early education in Georgia, and came with his father to Eufaula, then Irwinton, in 1836. A few years later he entered Yale college, from which he graduated in 1843, delivering the salutatory oration. The next year he graduated from the law department of Yale, returned to Eufaula, and entered upon the practice with his brother, John Gill Shorter. They had a large and remunerative business and were considered one of the strongest firms in east Alabama. A part from his high rank as a lawyer, Eli Shorter, in time became prominent as a political leader. In 1855 he was the Democratic nominee for congress, and though living in a strong Whig district, he was elected over Julius C. Alford of Pike, who had previously served in the house of representatives from Georgia. He was re-elected in 1857 over Batt Patterson of Barbour, carrying every county in the district. During the four years of his congressional career, he acted with the Southern Rights wing of the Democratic party, and acquired a national reputation as a platform speaker. He was fluent and convincing in his oratory, and often arose to the loftiest flights of eloquence. At the close of his second term, he returned to his law practice, but appeared again in public life in 1860 as an elector on the Breckenridge ticket. In the presidential campaign of 1868 he was prevailed upon to canvass the northwestern states for the Seymour and Blair ticket. Again in 1876, at the earnest request of his friend, Thomas Hendricks, he performed the same service for the Tilden and Hendricks ticket. True to his southern convictions, Eli Shorter was an ardent supporter of the Confederate cause. On the organization of the 18th Alabama infantry regiment, September 4, 1861, he was appointed by President Davis lieutenant-colonel, and was later promoted colonel. Colonel Shorter commanded the regiment at the battle of Shiloh and his report of the first day's battle shows that the casualties of the regiment were 120 killed, wounded, and missing. The regiment did not participate in the second day's battle as it was detailed to escort the brigade of Gen. Prentiss to the rear, a command which the regiment had largely aided to capture. The rigors of camp life proved too severe for Colonel Shorter's by no means strong constitution. This rendered it imperative for him to resign, which he did in 1862, not long after the battle of Shiloh. This was followed by his appointment by Gov. Shorter as one of his aides, and in January, 1863, he was sent to Richmond to confer with the secretary of war in reference to the military defense of southeast Alabama and west Florida. After the war Col. Shorter devoted himself to his profession, to planting, and to his duties as president of the Vicksburg and Brunswick railroad. He was a Knight Templar, Mason, and a Baptist. During the latter years of his life he was very active in church work, and at the time of his death, was president of the Baptist state convention. Married: January 12, 1848, in La Grange, Ga., to Marietta Fannin, a niece of Col. James Fannin, who perished with his command in the massacre at Goliad. Children: 1. Annie Bell, m. A. H. Leftwich, of Lynchburg, Va., later of Spartanburg, S. C.; 2. William A., died in Rome, Ga.; 3. Clement C., born February 1, 1856, died unmarried June 16, 1890; 4. Eli, Jr., m. Wileyna, daughter of Col. Henry J. Lamar, lawyer, member from Barbour County 1882-83, 1884-85, 1886-87, and speaker house of representatives 1888-89. Last residence: Eufaula.

SHORTER, HENRY RUSSELL, lawyer, president of the railroad commission of Alabama, was born February 28, 1833, at Monticello, and died at Eufaula, November 28, 1898; son of Gen. Reuben Clarke and Mary Butler (Gill) Shorter (q. v.); brother of John Gill Shorter (q. v.), and of Eli Sims Shorter (q. v.). In 1836, he came with his parents to Eufaula, and in 1849 entered the University of North Carolina, from which he was graduated in 1853, A. B. He then read law with his brother Eli S. Shorter, at Eufaula, and in May, 1854, was admitted to the bar. He associated with his brother in the practice of law under the firm name of Shorter & Brother, and was actively engaged in that business, and in planting until the outbreak of the War of Secession. He enlisted as a private in Co. A, First regiment Alabama Volunteer infantry, early in 1861, and served twelve months. He then joined the army of northern Virginia, with the rank of first lieutenant and aide-de-camp, on the staff of Brig.-Gen. C. A. Battle, where he remained until the close of the war. He was wounded May 5, 1864, during the battle of the Wilderness, and left the service with the full rank of major, acting adjutant and inspector general. Preferring a lower rank upon the staff of Gen. Battle, he refused the promotion tendered him by Gen. R. E. Rhodes, on May 12, 1864, at Spotylvania, as lieutenant-colonel on his staff, and when Gen. Battle was severely wounded, October 19, 1864, at the battle of Cedar Creek, Va., Maj. Shorter accompanied him home to Alabama. At the close of the war he resumed his law practice, and in February, 1885, Gov. O'Neal appointed him president of the railroad commission of Alabama, one of the most important departments of the state, which position he held until 1897, being reappointed by Gov. Seay and Gov. Jones. In 1874, at the November election in Eufaula, while contending for the rights of his state, a street battle was fought between the Democrats and Radicals, in which he was twice shot, his life however, being spared. He was the elector from his district on the Greeley ticket, and when Thomas Seay, was candidate for governor, he toured the state with him. In 1897, he returned to Eufaula, and devoted the remainder of his life to the interests of several large loan corporations represented by him. He was an Episcopalian. Married: May 9, 1854, at Eufaula, to Addie Keitt, daughter of John Keitt of Orangeburg, S. C., and a cousin of Col. Lawrence M. Keitt, who lost his life at Petersburg, while commanding his regiment. Children: 1. Adell, m. Maj. Charles C. Hanson, now of Memphis, Tenn.; 2. Alice, m. Gov. William D. Jelks (q. v.); 3. Henry Russell, Jr., graduated University of Alabama, A. B., 1889, register in U. S. land office, Indian Territory, 1893-94, deputy insurance commissioner of Alabama, 1903-07, and since 1907, in the insurance business in Birmingham; 4. Louise, deceased. Last residence: Eufaula.

SHORTER, JOHN GILL, lawyer, representative in the Confederate congress, seventeenth governor of Alabama, was born April 23, 1818, in Monticello, Ga., and died May 29, 1872, in Eufaula; son of Gen. Reuben Clarke and Mary Butler (Gill) Shorter (q. v.); brother of Hon. Eli Sims Shorter, who was a member of congress from Alabama, 1855-59, of Reuben C. Shorter, who was a lawyer and of Henry Russell Shorter (q. v.). He graduated from Franklin college, now the University of Georgia at Athens, in 1837, removed to Alabama, settling in Eufaula, and after a course of law studies was admitted to the bar in 1838, and commenced the practice of his profession. In 1842, he was appointed by Gov. Fitzpatrick, solicitor for his judicial district; in 1845, represented Barbour County in the State senate; and in 1851, represented that county in the lower house. He was later appointed by Gov. Collier to succeed Judge Goldthwaite on the circuit bench; the appointment was confirmed by re-election, in 1852, and for nine years he served in this position. In 1852, he had been elected to the office over F. S. Jackson, and in 1858, was re-elected without opposition. While he was serving in this position, Gov. Moore appointed him commissioner to Georgia, to attend the secession convention of 1861, and he urged the legislature of that state to co-operate in the movement for separation. He was elected to represent his district in the provisional Confederate congress, while attending the Georgia convention, and was elected governor, over Hon. T. H. Watts of Montgomery, at one time attorney-general of the C. S. Army, while in Richmond attending a sitting of the provisional congress. He was an ardent advocate of secession, and devoted himself to the success of the Confederate cause. He was unremitting in his efforts to provide for the soldiers' families, and to construct defenses for Mobile. During the latter part of his administration, the Federal forces, who had been driven out of northern Alabama in 1862, returned, bringing destruction with resultant suffering to the citizens; and in the northern counties, Forrest's pursuit of Staight and the capture of his forces in May, 1863, took place. These hardships of war caused popular discontent, which reacted against the governor, and in 1863, he was defeated by Hon. T. H. Watts. He was never again active in public life, and after peace was declared, resumed the practice of law at Eufaula. He was a member of the Baptist church. Married: in 1843, at Eufaula, to Mary Jane Battle, daughter of Dr. Cullen and Jane (Lamon) Battle, the former who was a native of North Carolina, and removed to Alabama in 1836, and the sister of Rev. Archibald J. Battle of Macon, Ga., and Gen. Cullen A. Battle of Macon County, the latter who was a lawyer, planter, and a brigadier-general in the C. S. Army. Children: 1. Mary Jane, m. Benjamin Willingham, deceased, resides at Eufaula; and other children who died in early life. Last residence: Eufaula.

SHORTER, REUBEN CLARKE, physician, planter, and legislator, was born March 13, 1787, in Culpeper County, Va., and died July 14, 1853, at Eufaula. He was educated at the University of Pennsylvania. He removed to Georgia, settled in Twiggs County, later removed to Monticello, Jasper County, served in both houses of the Georgia legislature and was a major general of militia. In 1836, he removed to Eufaula where he practiced his profession and was also a planter. He was a Baptist. Married: May 31, 1812, at Monticello, Ga., to Mary Butler Gill. Children: 1. Emily Frances, m. David C. Kolb, parents of Reuben F. Kolb (q. v.); 2. John Gill (q. v.) m. Mary Jane Battle; 3. Sarah Elizabeth, m. James Lingard Hunter; 4. Martha Gill, m. William Henry McKleroy (q. v.); 5. Eli Sims (q. v.), m. Marietta Fannin; 6. Reuben C., m. Caroline Billingsly; 7. Sophia H., m. Tennant Lomax (q. v.); 8. Mary Butler, m. William H. Thornton; 9. Henry Russell (q. v.), m. Adrianna Keitt; 10. Laura M., m. Thomas Cowles; 11-13, died in infancy. Last residence: Eufaula.

SHORTRIDGE, ELI, lawyer, member State legislature, justice Alabama supreme court, was born in 1794, in Paris, Ky., and died July 20, 1843, in Talladega, where he is buried; son of David Shortridge, and wife, who was a Miss Muir, of Virginia, who removed to Greenup County, Ky., the former being killed, in 1804, in a property dispute, in Cabel County, Va., by one of the Hampton family. Two little sons went in a canoe, from Kentucky to Virginia, via the Ohio River, and brought back their father's body. Mr. Shortridge was educated in the high schools of Virginia and read law at Mt. Sterling, Ky. In 1822, he removed to Tuscaloosa, where he practiced law. In 1828, he was appointed for a short term to the supreme court bench. He represented Tuscaloosa County in the legislature; in 1835 elected to the circuit court, which judgeship he held to the date of his death. He was a Democrat; a Mason; and an Episcopalian. Married: to Leah Howell of the Howard family of Virginia and Georgia. Children: 1. George David, m. Elizabeth King (q. v.); 2. Margaret, m. Adolphus Pearson, Texas; 3. Elizabeth, m. Dr. Paul Hamilton Lewis, Mobile; 4. Maria, m. Burwell Boykin; 5. Howard. Last residence: Talladega.

SHORTRIDGE, GEORGE DAVID, mayor, county solicitor and circuit judge, was born in 1814, in Mt. Sterling, Ky., and died July 1, 1870, in Montevallo, Shelby County; son of Judge Eli and Leah (Howell) Shortridge (q. v.). He was educated in the schools of Tuscaloosa; graduated from the University of Alabama, 1833, the degree of A. M. being conferred later; studied law and admitted to the bar, 1835. He removed to Montgomery; was appointed county solicitor; elected mayor of the city, and a director in the State bank. He removed to Montevallo and in 1838 was elected circuit judge and served ten years. He was nominated for governor of Alabama on the American or Know-nothing ticket, but was defeated; was a member of the Secession convention, 1861. Author: contributed to the Southern literary messenger, and De Bow's review. He was a "Know-nothing" but changed to the Democratic party; was a Secessionist; an Odd Fellow; and a Baptist. Married: in 1836, in Montevallo, to Elizabeth, daughter of Edmund and Nancy (Reagan) King, of Montevallo. Children: 1. George David, jr., m. Victoria Echols; 2. Louisa, m. Judge Reuben Gains; 3. Eli, Confederate soldier, killed at the battle of Seven Pines; 4. Frank Forester, Confederate soldier, lieutenant, killed at Atlanta; 5. Lella, m. W. J. Sedberry; 6. William Webb, of Birmingham. Last residence: Montevallo.

SHUMAKER, HARMON, soldier of the American Revolution, aged 73, and a resident of Fayette County; private Maryland militia; enrolled on July 12, 1834, under act of congress of June 7, 1832, payment to date from March 4, 1831; annual allowance, $40.—Revolutionary Pension Roll, in vol. xiv, Sen. doc. 514, 23rd Cong., 1st sess., 1833-34.

SIBERT, MARTIN D., tutor in drawing in the department of engineering, University of Alabama, 1887-88, and of mathematics and engineering, 1888-89. Deceased.

SIBERT, WILLIAM J., farmer and merchant, was born October 17, 1833, in St. Clair County; son of David and Elizabeth (Cook) Sibert, natives of Abbeville District, S. C., the former a planter who moved to St. Clair County in 1819, and thence to De Kalb County in 1833, where he purchased lands from the Indians, eighty acres of which, according to their tradition, had been in cultivation over one hundred years. David Sibert's father came to America as a soldier in the British Army, served his term of enlistment, then adopted this country as his own and at once joined the Colonial Army under General Marion. He married a Miss Wilmore, of Virginia, and died in South Carolina, where he had been a farmer, and a Lutheran preacher. Mr. Sibert was reared on a farm, and received a common school education. He served several months as 2nd lieutenant, of Co. I, 10th Alabama infantry regiment, but resigned on account of ill health. In the spring of 1862, he joined Co. G, 48th Alabama infantry regiment, and participated in the second battle of Manassas, the Wilderness, and Petersburg. He was wounded at Manassas, and at Petersburg was forced from the effects of his wounds to retire from the field. He then accepted a position in the quartermaster's department and remained there to the close of the war. After farming two years, he removed to Gadsden and engaged in the hotel business from 1867 until 1879, then in the mercantile business. He was a Methodist; and a Mason. Married: September 20, 1856, to Mary E. Ward.

Children: 1. Charicle, m. A. J. Blair; 2. William Luther, (q. v.); 3. Samuel H.; 4. Martin D., b. Feb. 26, 1867, B.M.E., B.C.E., A.M. '89, LL.B. '91, lawyer, owner and editor Gadsden "Tribune", d. Oct. 24, 1896; 5. Fannie B.; 6. Olin W. Last residence: Gadsden.

SIBERT, WILLIAM LUTHER, major-general, U. S. Army, was born October 12, 1860, in Etowah County; son of William Joshua and Marietta (Ward) Sibert, the former a farmer and merchant living near Gadsden, served in an Alabama regiment in the C. S. Army, being wounded at the second battle of Bull Run; grandson of Martin David Sibert and his wife, a Miss Cook, a native of Ireland who moved to Alabama from Abbeville District, S. C., in 1819. His great-grandfather was a resident of Abbeville District, S. C., and was known to have been there prior to the Revolutionary War. Family tradition indicates that he moved from the Alsace Lorraine Country to South Carolina, and that that particular section of the country was selected because of the fact that the climate was suitable for making wine and silks. The family records in South Carolina were destroyed by fire and further ancestral data is unavailable. General Sibert attended schools at Gadsden until he was fourteen years of age when he went to work on his father's farm where he remained until 1878, when he entered the University of Alabama, and was appointed to the United States military academy at West Point by Colonel Forney, and after special training by Dr. Parker, professor of modern languages at the University, entered West Point in the spring of 1880. In 1884 he graduated from the academy and was assigned to the corps of engineers, U. S. Army as a second lieutenant; promoted first lieutenant, 1888, captain, 1896, major, 1904, lieutenant colonel, 1909, and was made a brigadier-general by special act of congress in recognition of services in connection with the building of the Panama canal, March 4, 1915, receiving the thanks of congress at the same time the promotion was made; and major-general, May 15, 1917. He was awarded the distinguished service medal for his services in the European War, 1917-1918, and was made a commander of the Legion of Honor by the French government, 1917-1918. He was in local charge of the construction of one-half of the ship canal in the connecting waters of the great lakes, 1892-94; chief engineer of the 8th Army corps, Philippines, 1899-1900; chief engineer and general manager of the Manila and Dagupan railroad, 1899-1900; in charge of the engineering, river and harbor districts with headquarters in Louisville and Pittsburgh, 1900-1907, and served as a member of the Isthmian Canal commission, March, 1907 to April, 1914. He built Gatun locks and dam, Panama Canal; the west breakwater, in Colon harbor; and excavated the harbor from Gatun to the Atlantic Ocean. SIMS, JAMES MARION, physician and surgeon, was born January 25, 1813, in Lancaster District, S. C., and died November 13, 1883, in New York City; son of John and Mahala (Mackey) Sims, the former a native of South Carolina, who was over twenty-three years of age before he attended school and then for only six months, but who became an expert accountant and bookkeeper, a soldier of the War of 1812, colonel of a regiment of militia, a surveyor, kept the village hotel at Lancaster, S. C., and was sheriff from 1830-34; grandson of Charles and Lydia Mackey, of Scotch-Irish descent, who came to America about 1740, the former a soldier of the Revolutionary War; great-grandson of Sherrod Sims, a native of Virginia who served through the Revolutionary War, and afterwards removed to Lancaster County, S. C. Dr. Sims received his early education at the common schools and under private tutors. He graduated from South Carolina college in 1832; studied medicine under a local physician at Charleston, S. C.; entered Charleston medical school, in November, 1833; received the M. D. degree from Jefferson medical college, in 1835, and the honorary degree of LL. D., from the same college, in 1881. He began the practice of his profession in Lancaster, S. C., staying only a short time and removing to Mt. Meigs, Montgomery County, in the fall of 1835. He remained here until 1837, removed to Macon County, settled near Cross Keys, and after three years, he located in Montgomery. He was the first physician in the South to have success in the treatment of strabismus and clubfoot, and in 1845, he announced a new hypothesis in explanation of trismus nascentium, attributing the disease to mechanical pressure on the base of the brain. The same year he conceived a method of curing vesico-vaginal fistula, and established and supported at his own expense a hospital into which he collected cases. From 1849 he was known chiefly as a gynecologist. He was the first to begin the use of silver wire instead of silk sutures in cases of surgery where sutures were needed. He invented the duck-bill speculum, to which his name is now attached, and several other instruments of great usefulness. He removed to New York in 1852, where he began a movement for the establishment of a woman's hospital. In 1861 he went to Europe in order to study hospital architecture as he was dissatisfied with the plans for the new building, a temporary building having been in use since 1855. After his return in 1862, he persuaded the board of governors to adopt the pavilion style. While in Europe he operated by request before classes in hospitals in Paris, Brussels, London, Dublin, and for physicians in private practice, and the Legion of Honor was conferred upon him by the French government. He returned to Europe in 1862, in order to place his children in school, and practiced his profession in Paris until 1864, in London until 1868, when he returned to New York as surgeon-in-chief of the Woman's hospital. He returned to Paris in 1870 and when the Franco-Prussian War began he became surgeon-in-chief of an ambulance corps organized by the American colony. Later he organized the Anglo-American ambulance corps and arrived at Sedan immediately after the battle. He returned to New York in 1871, and in January, 1872, was reappointed surgeon-in-chief of the Woman's hospital, and resigned on December 1, 1874. He was an active or corresponding member of many medical societies in America and Europe, besides being an honorary member of the Edinburgh, Brussels, Berlin, Christiania, Paris, and Dublin societies; fellow of the Obstetrical society of London; member of the Alabama State medical association; New York County and State medical society; New York academy of medicine; New York neurological, pathological and surgical society; honorary member of the Connecticut State, Virginia, South Carolina, and California State medical societies; member of the American gynecological society. Author: "Clinical notes on uterine surgery," 1865; "Intra-uterine fibroid tumors"; "Microscope in the sterile condition"; "Treatise on ovariectomy," 1873; "History of the discovery of anaesthesia"; "The story of my life," 1844; besides many contributions to medical journals. Married: December 21, 1836, to Eliza Theresa, daughter of Dr. Bartlett and Theresa Jones, of Lancaster, S. C. Children: order conjectural, 1. Mary; 2. Merry; 3. Fanny; 4. Eliza; 5. Carrie; 6. Harry; 7. Henry; 8. William; 9. Knickerbocker. Last residence: New York City.

SIMS, THOMAS WILKINS, associate member state tax commission, was born February 23, 1882, at Mobile; son of Thomas Wilkins and Virginia Pauline (Stewart) Sims, the former of Greensboro, Greene County, Ga., the latter of Mobile; grandson of Benjamin and Sarah (Brown) Sims, and of George Noble and Marie Pauline (David) Stewart, of Mobile. He was educated in the private and public schools of Mobile, and at Webb's school at Bell Buckle, Tenn., and attended the University of Virginia, 1900-1902, taking one year of the law course there. After leaving school he was in the real estate business in Mobile until his appointment to the State Board of Equalization by Governor Henderson on July 9, 1915. He was reappointed as a member of the State tax commission by Governor Kilby after his inauguration. He is a Democrat; Methodist; and a thirty-second degree Mason. Residence: Montgomery.

SIMS, WILLIAM HENRY, lawyer, lieutenant governor of Mississippi, was born July 31, 1837, at Lexington, Oglethorpe County, Ga., and died February 28, 1920, at Birmingham; son of James Saunders and Amanda Booker (Moore) Sims, who were both of Virginia extraction, the former who was for fifty years a prominent physician of middle Georgia. Mr. Sims received his general education at Meeson Academy, Lexington, Ga., and at the University of Georgia, at Athens, where he was graduated. He studied law in the office of Thomas R. R. Cobb, and at the Harvard Law school, Cambridge, Mass. He removed from Georgia to Columbus, Miss., in 1859, where he became a member of the bar, and was just beginning his practice when the War of Secession broke out. He enlisted in the C. S. Army in the Tombigbee Rangers, with the rank of first orderly sergeant, and soon became second lieutenant of his company, which became a part of an infantry brigade under Gen. Frank Cheatham at Union City, Tenn., and began service as Co. A, Blyth's battalion. It was afterwards Co. A, Forty-fourth Mississippi regiment. He participated in the battle of Belmont, Mo., and was promoted to the rank of captain after the battle of Shiloh. His regiment fell back with Bragg's army to, Salltillo, Miss., was transferred to Tennessee, and engaged in the three days fight against Rosecrans at Stone River. He was wounded at Chickamauga, but remained in active service during the four months fighting between Dalton and Atlanta. At the beginning of that campaign, he was detached from regimental duty, and was occupied as inspector-general of Tucker's brigade, until Hood's flank movement into Tennessee. After the fall of Atlanta, he was put in command of his regiment as lieutenant-colonel. In December, 1864, at the battle of

Franklin, Tenn., while leading his regiment in a night fight, he received a severe wound through the knee joint, was taken to Columbia, Tenn., to the hospital, and as a result of this wound, the lower part of his left leg was amputated. He was captured by the U. S. army, on the fall of Columbia, and after remaining in the hospital for three months, was imprisoned at Louisville, and under President Andrew Johnson's order that conscious rebels should not be discharged from prison, but should be held for trial for treason, was one of the three last officers released from the prison. He returned to his home at Columbus, Miss., and resumed his law practice; was elected probate judge of his county, in 1866; but in 1869, was removed from office under the reconstruction military regime, and again practiced law. He formed a partnership with Col. Samuel M. Meek; later Judge Jehu A. Orr joined the firm, and subsequently the firm became merely Orr & Sims. In 1875, Col. Sims was nominated and elected State senator, from the eighteenth district of Mississippi, composed of Lowndes, Oktibbeha, and Clay Counties, and when John M. Stone, president pro tempore of the senate, succeeded to the governorship, he was made president of the senate, and became as such, acting lieutenant-governor. At the next election, in 1878, he was elected lieutenant-governor for a four year term, thus holding this office for six years; and after declining other nominations, returned to Columbus, Miss., in 1882, to practice law. He was offered appointments to positions on the circuit court and supreme court benches of Mississippi, but declined them both. In 1885, he served as both temporary and permanent president of the State Democratic convention; was a delegate from the state at large to the national Democratic convention at St. Louis, Mo., 1888, and to the convention at Chicago, in 1892, when he acted as chairman of his delegation; and was first assistant secretary of the interior during President Cleveland's administration, from 1893-97. In 1898, he removed to Birmingham with his son, Henry Upson Sims, and from then until his death on February 28, 1920, in his eighty-third year, he kept in close touch with his business interests, which were quite extensive in Birmingham; but he never practiced law in Alabama. In commenting upon his death, the Birmingham Ledger, on February 28, 1920, said:—

"Col. Sims was a fine type of the real southern gentleman. He was courteous and kindly. He was one of the best-read men and most cultivated. He had no use for little and mean things and was open in expression of disapproval of anything which deflected from the high standard of southern manhood which he set for himself.

"Largely owing to the loss of his foot and the inconvenience of an artificial limb, becoming more cumbersome as he grew older, Col. Sims' life during the past few years had been largely that of a recluse in his handsome home on South Twelfth avenue, but even there he kept in close touch with the outside world and his opinion of big men and events was eagerly sought by the scholarly and cultured.

"Governor Sims was a man of scrupulous integrity, whose word was literally as good as his bond. He held honor highest of manly traits and in that respect was unyielding to compromise."

Married: August 11, 1870, at Lexington, Ga., to Louisa Upson, daughter of Francis Lewis and Serena (McKinley) Upson; granddaughter of Stephen Upson, one of Georgia's lawyers in the time of Andrew Jackson, who came from Connecticut to Lexington, Ga., about 1808 or 1809, and for whom Upson County, Ga., was named; great-granddaughter of Dr. Francis Davis Cummins, a Presbyterian minister who accompanied Capt. Jack from Mecklinburg County, N. C., to Philadelphia, when Capt. Jack was a delegate from the Mecklinburg convention to bear the announcement of the Mecklinburg Declaration of Independence to the Philadelphia convention. Mrs. Sims was the first State regent in Mississippi of the Daughters of the American Revolution in that state, and continued state regent of Mississippi until removing her residence to Birmingham. Mrs. Sims died in Birmingham July 21, 1913. William H. Sims had but one child, Henry Upson Sims (q. v.). Last residence: Birmingham.

SINNOTT, WILLIAM ISIDORE, Presbyterian minister, was born November 24, 1855, at Mobile; son of John Augustine and Caroline Elizabeth (Chester) Sinnott, the former who was a native of Maryland, and lived in New Orleans, La., the greater part of his life; grandson of John Fox and Caroline (Wood) Chester, who lived at Mobile. He was of Irish ancestry on his father's side, and English on his mother's side, the latter ancestors who came from England and settled in Connecticut at an early date. He attended Oxford college, and later the University of Mississippi, where he was graduated, in 1877, A. B., and in 1882, from Princeton university with the degree of A. M. He attended the Presbyterian theological seminary, Princeton, N. J., for two years, and the Union theological seminary, at Hampden-Sidney, Va., for one year. In 1882, he was licensed to preach, and in January, 1884, was ordained to the full work of the ministry. He preached for five years in Lafayette County, Miss., and one and one half years at Birmingham. He was pastor at Columbiana, fifteen years, and at Centerville, six and one half years. For twenty-four years he was clerk of the North Alabama Presbytery, and of the Synod of Alabama, for twenty-two years. He was superintendent of the Orphan's Home, Synod of Alabama, 1892-93, and assistant superintendent of the Stillman institute, 1904-05. He is unmarried. Residence: Salters Depot, S. C.

SKAGGS, WILLIAM H., banker, was born in 1861, in Talladega County. Having lost his father during his boyhood he was thrown upon his own resources, and aided in the support of his mother's household. In 1885, he was elected mayor of Talladega, and he immediately began to put in operation a number of practical reforms, one of the first being the establishment of a system of water works, which when completed supplied from purest springs, was considered the finest in the southern states. He encouraged the formation of a fire company, had shade trees planted along the side walks, fountains erected in the public square and inaugurated other civic improvements. He established the Citizens bank, in 1886, then called the Bank of Talladega, of which he was president. He established the public school system of Talladega which was put into operation in 1886. Residence: Chicago.

SLOSS, JAMES WITHERS, merchant, planter, railroad president, pioneer coal operator, iron manufacturer, was born April 7, 1820, at Mooresville, Limestone County, and died May 4, 1890, in Birmingham; son of Joseph and Clarissa (Wasson) Sloss, of Bellaghy, County Derry, Ireland, who came to America in 1803, settling in Virginia, the former a soldier in the War of 1812; grandson of Robert and Ann (Long) Sloss, who also emigrated from Ireland in 1830, and of Alexander and Elizabeth (Parry) Wasson, of Scotch-Irish descent, who moved to Huntsville from Virginia in 1814. Receiving only a limited education he began his business career at the age of fifteen as a bookkeeper. For seven years he continued this work, studying as best he could, and at the end of this time buying a county store at Athens with his savings. By the late fifties he had extended his mercantile interests throughout the entire northern section of the State, owned several plantations and had taken up the fight for railroads. He was president of the Nashville and Decatur railroad, a north Alabama road, which was organized on January 1, 1867, by consolidation with the Central, Southern, Tennessee, and Alabama railroad companies, and later merged into the Louisville and Nashville system. In 1876, he and James Thomas leased the Oxmoore furnace plant. Later he became interested in the Pratt coal seam and was one of the managers of the Eureka mining and transportation company, the first company organized for the making of coke pig iron in Birmingham. In 1877 he formed a partnership with Truman Aldrich and in January, 1878, a company was organized and known as the Pratt coal and coke company, the first big coal company of Alabama, of which he was secretary and treasurer. The camp near the mines shortly became Pratt City. He resigned from the Pratt coal and coke company, in 1879 to give his attention exclusively to iron making, returning to the Oxmoore furnaces. In 1881 he formed the Sloss furnace company, at the same time severing his connections with the Eureka company. This company later became the big Sloss-Sheffield steel and iron company and at the same time, 1886, passed out of the hands of Mr. Sloss who was then nearing his seventieth year. He was interested in the educational progress of the South and served as president of the Lake DeFuniak Chautauqua association. He was a Methodist. Married: (1) Mary, daughter of Joseph and Rachel Bigger, of Belfast, Ireland; (2) Martha, daughter of Thomas and Winifred Lundie, of Oxford, Miss. Children: by first wife, 1. Letitia, deceased; 2. SLOSS, JOSEPH HUMPHREYS, U. S. marshal and representative in congress, was born October 12, 1826, at Somerville, and died January 27, 1911, in Memphis, Tenn.; son of Rev. James Long and Letitia V. (Campbell) Sloss (q. v.). He received his education under his father, who taught a classical school and was the pastor of the Presbyterian church, and studied law at Athens, Tenn., under his kinsman, Thomas Nixon Vandyke. He was admitted to the bar at eighteen and practiced his profession in St. Louis, four years, after which he removed to

Edwardsville, Ill. During the contest for the U. S. senatorship between Judge Douglas and Mr. Lincoln in 1858, he was elected to the Illinois legislature and there assisted in the election of Judge Douglas. In 1861, with his family, he left Illinois to return to Alabama and offer his services to the Confederate Army. He raised a company in Lauderdale County, which was attached to the 4th Alabama cavalry, of which he was elected captain. In 1863 he was promoted to a majority for gallantry, and served in the field until the close of the war. He took part in a number of engagements. In 1865 he formed a law partnership in Tuscumbia with Gov. R. B. Lindsay. The next year he was elected mayor of Tuscumbia and though removed by Gen. Pope, he was re-elected. He continued in the practice of law with Gov. Lindsay until 1871, when he was elected to the U. S. congress, serving through the forty-second and forty-third congresses. In 1879 he was appointed U. S. marshal for the northern district of Alabama, a position that required a residence in Huntsville to which place he removed. He resigned from the office in 1882 to devote his entire time to editing the "Huntsville advocate" and to conducting a real estate business. He was a Democrat; Presbyterian; a Mason, and an Odd Fellow. Married: April 2, 1850, in Edwardsville, Ill., to Mary L. Lusk. Children: 1. James Long, died young; 2. Mary Louise, died in girlhood; 3. SMITH, EDNA KENDERDINE, portrait painter, was born January 4, 1880, at Rockford, Ill.; daughter of Charles Henry and Jennie Agnes (McConnell) Smith of Adrian, Mich., who lived in the foregoing states and in Virginia at various periods of his life; granddaughter of Samuel Mather and Laura (Ainsworth) Smith of Utica, N. Y., and of James Wallace and Esther (Coleman) McConnell, natives of Glasgow, Scotland, who emigrated to America shortly after their marriage and settled in Connecticut; great-granddaughter of Solomon and Mollie (Dewey) Scovell of Connecticut, of English ancestry, and some of whose forebears are buried in Trinity churchyard, New York City. In 1862, Lieut. Samuel Smith of New London, Conn., was granted twenty pounds, with William Rodgers of England, for procuring the charter for the Colony of Connecticut. His descendant, Samuel Smith, married Jirusha, daughter of Cotton Mather. Their son, Cotton Mather Smith, settled in Sharon, Conn., and died full of honors in 1845, being the last governor of that state under the "old regime." The family traces its descent from a long line of worthies, dating as far back as the feudal period of French Flanders, 1120. The Ainsworths came of Puritan stock, with John Ainsworth of Lancaster, England, 1369, as the founder, and of Thomas Ainsworth of Woodstock, Conn., a connecting link in the line of descent. Miss Smith was graduated from the high school of Birmingham, and studied art in Paris, France, a pupil of Academie Julian, under M. Benjamin-Constant, Jean Paul Laurens, M. Baschet and M. Schonomer. She was an exhibitor in the salon, 1900, and in 1902 opened her studio in Birmingham. She has painted the portraits of a number of notable Alabamians. In the portrait gallery of the department of Archives and History, the Capitol, Montgomery are portraits of Gov. Arthur P. Bagby, Gov. Gabriel Moore, Dr. Eugene A. Smith, and Miss Julia Tutwiler. She is an Episcopalian. Residence: Birmingham and New York.

James and Alice (Bradford) Fitch, the former a native of Saybrook, Conn., landowner, soldier in the Indian Wars, an early patron of Yale college, to which he gave the glass and nails for its first edifice, and in 1701 an endowment of six hundred and thirty-seven acres of land, and of Josiah and Sarah (Winchell) Phelps; great-great-great-great-great-grandson of Capt. Thomas and Abigail (Warham) Allyn, of Maj. William Bradford, of Samuel and Sarah (Griswold) Phelps, and of Henry and Abiale (Gaffe) Walcott; great-great-great-great-great-great-grandson of Gov. William Bradford, a native of Austerfield, Yorkshire, England, who emigrated to America, settled in Plymouth, Mass., in 1607, and was second governor of Plymouth Colony, of Matthew and Ann (Amith) Allyn, the former a native of Brampton, County Devon, England, who emigrated to America, resided in the colony of Connecticut from 1637 to 1671, was a member of the council of the supreme court of Connecticut, a representative to the general court from 1648 to 1658, except 1653, magistrate of the colony, 1657 to 1667, commissioner for the United Colonies of New England, 1660-64, and in 1661 moderator and a member of the committee to petition for the charter, in which document, granted to Connecticut by Charles II, he was named as one of the grantees, of Henry and Sarah (Newberry) Walcott, of William and Elizabeth Phelps, the former a native of Tewksbury, Gloucester County, England, who emigrated to America in 1630, and settling in Dorchester, Mass., later in Windsor, a magistrate for several years and deputy to the general court, 1645-51, and 1657, and of Rev. John Warham, also an emigrant from England; great-great-great-great-great-great-great-grandson of Henry and Elizabeth (Saunders) Wolcott, the former a native of Tolland, County Somersetshire, England, who emigrated to America, located in Windsor, Conn., member of the lower house of the general assembly, 1643, and also a member of the house of magistrates. Dr. Smith was educated in the private schools of Prattville and the public schools of Philadelphia, Pa.; entered the junior class, University of Alabama, 1860, and received the A. B. degree, in 1862; attended the Universities of Berlin, Goettingen, and Heidelberg, receiving from the latter the degrees of A. M. and Ph. D., summa cum laude, 1868; spent the summers while in Europe in travel; and received the honorary degree of LL. D. from the University of Mississippi, in 1899. In April, 1862, all of the members of his class at the University of Alabama were sent to various parts of the state for the purpose of drilling recruits. Dr. Smith was sent to Greenville and he enlisted in Co. K, one of the companies that he was drilling, as a private. Upon the reorganization of the company at the beginning of the Tennessee-Kentucky campaign he was elected second lieutenant, serving in this capacity until he was detailed by President

Davis as state captain and instructor in tactics at the University of Alabama. He served in this capacity from December, 1862, to April 5, 1865. He went at once, upon his return to America from Europe, December, 1868, to the University of Mississippi as assistant in the geological survey and remained until June, 1871, when he was elected professor of mineralogy and geology at the University of Alabama, and has been connected ever since with this institution as professor of mineralogy and geology; mineralogy, geology and natural history; chemistry, mineralogy and geology and professor of mineralogy and geology. In 1873, upon the revision of the State geological and agricultural survey, he was appointed State geologist by the legislature and has held this position to the present time. As State geologist he has performed permanent and invaluable work in the exploration of the vast and varied mineral resources of the State. His voluminous official as well as his fragmentary reports and writings for the press have given to the world proof of the mineral wealth of the State never before known. He was appointed honorary commissioner for Alabama at the Paris exposition, 1878; special agent for the tenth census, on cotton culture in Alabama and Florida, 1880; one of the commissioners to select public lands donated to the University of Alabama by congress, 1884; member American committee, International geological congress, 1884-89; member of the council, Geological society of America, 1892-95; member of the jury of awards at the Atlanta exposition, 1895; Nashville exposition, 1897; Louisiana purchase exposition, 1904; vice-president and chairman of section E, of the American association for the advancement of science, 1904; delegate to the international mining congress, Boise City, Idaho, 1901; member of the council, 1892-95, second vice-president, 1906, and president, 1913, Geological society of America. He attended Cornell university, 1868-1870, but did not graduate, leaving school to accompany an expedition to the Amazon, under Prof. C. F. Hartt, from whom he had taken a special course in geology. In 1877-1878, he was attached to the Brazilian geological survey under Prof. Hartt. Much of his time after 1870 was spent as a traveling naturalist. He was on the Amazon, 1873-77, in Brazil, Argentina, and Bolivia, 1881-1885, in Mexico, 1888, West Indies, 1889-1890, Colombia, 1898-1901, and the collections made on these expeditions are to be found in every important museum in the world, including the British, the Berlin, Vienna, the Jardin des Plantes, Paris, the Kew, Edinburgh, and the American, National, Carnegie and Field Museums in America. His work in Mexico was for "Biologia Centrali-Americana," and in the West Indies, was under the auspices of the joint West Indian committee of the Royal society and British association. From 1896 to 1898, he was connected with the Carnegie Museum of Pittsburgh, being curator the first year, and temporarily in charge during the last two years. During some months in 1906 and 1907 he was connected with the entomological department of the National Museum. He took up his work for the Alabama geological survey in 1909 and after 1910 was, until his death, curator of the Alabama Museum of natural history at the State University. From 1904 to 1908, he made a special study of Alabama mollusca, the expense of this work being defrayed by a body of naturalists from without the state. He was independent in politics; and a Congregationalist. Author: "Brazil: The Amazon and the Coast," 1880; "De Rio de Janeiro á Cuyabá" (in Portuguese), Rio Janeiro, 1887; "His majesty's sloop diamond rock," 1905; and numerous articles in Johnson's Cyclopedia, Century Dictionary, Century Cyclopedia of Names, and Century Magazine. Jonathan Smith of Lanesboro, Mass., lieutenant colonel Massachusetts State troops, several times a member of the Massachusetts legislature, general court 1776-83, member of the constitutional convention of 1788 which ratified the Federal constitution, and of Capt. Giles Doud of Middleton, Conn., who was with Gen. Montgomery at Quebec, descendant of Henry Doud, of Guilford, Surrey County, England, who settled in Guilford, Conn., in 1639, his wife, Esther (Bacon) Doud, was descended from Nathaniel Bacon, of the celebrated English Bacon family who settled in Middletown, Conn., in 1650; great-great-grandson of Jonathan Smith of Connecticut; great-great-great-grandson of John and Grace Smith, who settled in Milford, Conn., in 1639. These several lines of descent are of English and Knickerbocker stock. Professor Smith received his early education in the common schools of New Haven, and was prepared for college at the Bakersfield academy, Bakersfield, Vt. He was graduated from the University of Vermont in 1853 with the A. B. degree and in 1876 received from the same university the A. M. degree. He was a member of the Phi Beta Kappa college fraternity. In 1897 the University of Alabama gave him the honorary degree of LL. D. He studied law in LaGrange, Ga., and was ready to be admitted to the bar at the outbreak of the war. He came to Alabama in 1854, and except during the four years of the War of Secession, constantly engaged in educational work, having the unique record of teaching for fifty years in the same county. For a period of some years he was principal of private schools. In 1873 he was elected professor of English in the Agricultural and mechanical college, now the Alabama polytechnic institute of Alabama. The next year he was transferred to the chair of mathematics in that college, which position he held until his death. He was an ardent supporter of an advanced and efficient system of public schools; was president Alabama educational association; member American mathematical society; trustee of the East Alabama college, an institution under the control of the Methodist church; for six years trustee of the University of Alabama, holding that position while a professor in the Alabama polytechnic institute, a unique honor; member State board of education, 1870-76. He secured the passage in 1872, of the law that established the first State normal school for negroes, carrying also an appropriation for its support, a notable tribute to his character and leadership at that period of history in the State. He enlisted in the Confederate Army at the beginning of the War of Secession as a member of the 6th Alabama infantry regiment, under Gen. John B. Gordon's command. He was severely wounded at South Mountain, Md., where he was taken prisoner. After severe suffering and privations on a prison ship in Chesapeake Bay he was exchanged in the spring of 1863. On his release he was connected with the Army of the West, in the quartermaster department in West Alabama and Mississippi. He was a Whig before the war, but a Democrat afterward; Methodist; and a Mason. SMITH, ROBERT WHITE, merchant, planter and financier, was born November 18, 1817, at Warrenton, Fauquier County, Va., and died March 23, 1889, in Mobile; son of John Adams Washington and Maria Love (Hawkins) Smith, both natives of Virginia, the former a large land owner, and clerk of Fauquier County Court; grandson of Thomas and Elizabeth (Adams) Smith and of Capt. John and Alice Corbin (Thompson) Hawkins, all of Virginia. The earliest ancestor in this country, was John Smith, son of a wealthy English merchant doing a large business with the Virginia colony. He came from Bristol, England, in 1700, and settled in Westmoreland County, Va., where he married Mary Ann Adkins of Wales, a niece of Lady Washington. His son, Augustus, married Nannie Marshall, aunt of Chief Justice Marshall. Their son, Thomas, married Elizabeth Adams, member of a distinguished English family, the founder of which, John Adams, had come to this country to Maryland about the time of Charles II. His mother was a sister of Sir Thomas Lyttleton, cousin of Lord Lyttleton, the great premier of England. John Hawkins, Mr. Smith's maternal grandfather was a captain in the 3rd Virginia regiment and served throughout the Revolution. His great-grandmother was Lettice Lee, granddaughter of Richard Lee, 1st, of Essex, England, who settled in Virginia in 1640 and was the head of the great family by that name which produced "Light Horse" Harry Lee and Gen. Robert E. Lee. The great-great-grandfather was John Marshall of the "Forrest". Mr. Smith obtained his early education under tutors in his father's home and in the schools of his native county. He applied to Pres. Andrew Jackson for a midshipman's warrant in 1832 and would have received it but he had his name withdrawn. His first business experience was that of clerk in a commercial house in Fredericksburg, Va. In 1834 he started South on horseback to seek his fortune. Arriving in Alabama he stopped first at Huntsville and then located in Montgomery. At the outbreak of the Seminole War he enlisted in the Montgomery "True Blues" as a private and went through the war with that gallant company. In 1835 he settled in Mobile where he joined the "Mobile Rifles," of which company he was a member for many years, and with which he was mustered into the U. S.

service as part of the 1st Alabama volunteers for the Mexican War, holding the rank of first lieutenant. Later, upon the reorganization of the regiment, he was elected major, with T. J. Butler as colonel. Upon the promotion of Col. Butler to higher rank, Lt. Col. Todd was advanced to the regimental command and Maj. Smith became lieutenant colonel. In 1839 he formed a partnership with Oliver S. Beers as commission merchants and dealers in cotton bagging and rope. In 1849 the firm of Robt. W. Smith and co. was organized with Cary A. Butt as the other member. In 1858, having accumulated a handsome fortune, Col. Smith sold his interest in this business to his brother, Marshall J. Smith of New Orleans. He then retired to his cotton plantation near Pleasant Hill in Dallas County, where he resided until the outbreak of the War of Secession. In the fall of 1861, having received a captain's commission, he organized from the citizens of Mobile and Dallas counties, a cavalry company, the "Crocheron Light Dragoons," which joined Gen. Braxton Bragg's army, and became that distinguished officer's body guard at the battle of Shiloh, Capt. Smith acting as special aid to Gen. Bragg on that occasion. Because of "meritorious conduct on the field of battle", he was promoted to the rank of colonel of cavalry the day following, and was made civil and military governor of Corinth, Miss., while that town was occupied by the Confederate Army. He was also military governor of Tupelo, Miss., for a while. At the close of the war he returned to Mobile and again engaged in the commission business, as a member of the firm of Walsh, Smith and co., and later of Crawford, Walsh, Smith and co. During his business life in Mobile, Col. Smith was identified with nearly all the prominent enterprises in the place. He was for many years a director of the Southern bank of Alabama, the Bank of Mobile, the Mobile and Ohio railroad co.; and director and first vice-president of the Mobile and Alabama grand trunk railroad co., and director in many of the local insurance companies and other business corporations of that section. In 1873 he retired from business on account of ill health. He was an Episcopalian; and a 33rd degree Mason, having taken the degree in Edinburgh, Scotland, prior to the War of Secession. Married: July 19, 1848, at Pleasant Hill, Dallas County, to Sarah, daughter of Judge John Starke and Theodosia (Jones) Hunter (q. v.) of Clarke County. Judge Hunter took a prominent part in the early history of Alabama both as a lawyer and a statesman; a man of large wealth and of distinguished Virginia and South Carolina ancestry. The Jones family of South Carolina to which his wife, Theodosia, belonged, was of aristocratic lineage, descendants of John Smith, the gallant captain of Revolutionary fame. Children: 1. John Hunter; 2. Fannie E., m. John Scott Pollard, Montgomery; 3. Mildred; 4. Maria Theodosia; 5. Lettice Lee, m. Gaylord B. Clark (q. v.); 6. Alice, m. John S. Stump, Baltimore, Md.; 7. Ellen E.; 8. SMITH, WILLIAM HENRY, planter and cotton merchant, was born June 21, 1814, at Suffield, Conn., and died in February, 1890; son of Ichabod and Elizabeth (Hathaway) Smith; grandson of Ichabod and Susannah (Pomroy) Smith, who lived at Suffield; a relative of Sophia Smith, founder of Smith College, Northampton, Mass.; cousin of Gen. Ichabod Smith; a descendant of Capt. Simeon Smith, of Sharon, Conn., who raised and equipped a company of Sharon men, at his own expense, and served under George Washington, in 1776, in his unfortunate Long Island campaign, and in 1777, raised and equipped another company to resist Burgoyne's advance; of Rev. Henry Smith, who came to this country in 1735, and was the first settled pastor of the first settled town, Wethersfield, Conn., and of John Colton Smith, governor of Connecticut, 1712-17. The name of the house of the Smiths of Edmondthorse, of Withcote visitation of Leicester, was Herez or Harris, and tradition links them with the ancient Cuerdley stock, from whom came the Smiths of Hough, Oxford, etc. At the time of William the seventh, William Herez assumed the name Smith, and in 1499, received a grant of arms. He was married to Catherine Ashby. Rev. Henry Smith was a grandson of John Smith who was a son of William and Catherine (Ashby) Smith. Mr. Smith came to Montgomery in 1835, and worked in a hardware store, and after the War of Secession, was associated with William C. Ray, under the name of Smith & Ray in the cotton broker business. He later associated with Sayre, under the name of Sayre and Smith, cotton merchants. Besides his mercantile pursuits he was a planter. He was city treasurer of Montgomery about 1889, to February, 1890. He was a Democrat and a member of the Methodist church, in which he served as steward and trustee. SMITH, WILLIAM HENRY, business man, was born March 17, 1863, at Burnsville, Tishomingo County, Miss.; son of Moses Milton and Mary Ann (Johnson) Smith, the former of Burnsville, Miss., and the latter of Somerville; grandson of William A. and Margarette Smith, who resided at Burnsville, Miss., and of Louis and Sarah Johnson, who lived at Somerville. The Smith family emigrated from England and the Johnson family from Ireland. William H. Smith was educated in the common schools of Tishomingo County, Miss. He was a railroad agent and telegraph operator for eighteen years, beginning in 1888; agent at Town Creek, Scottsboro and Russellville; merchant for thirteen years; now secretary-treasurer of The Farmers Supply Company, of Town Creek, which corporation he organized in January, 1919. He was a member of the State senate from the second district in 1919. He is a Democrat; Prohibitionist; Methodist; Royal Arch Mason; and an Odd Fellow. Married: on May 7, 1893, at Town Creek, to Laura Sophia Davis, daughter of Chesley and Sarah Davis, of that place; and granddaughter of Orin Davis, who came to Tennessee Valley from Washington, D. C., during the early days of Alabama, and of William McGregor, of Scottish descent, one of the early settlers of Lawrence County, Alabama. Children: 1. Leonidas Houston, m. Edna Twetty, Miss.; 2. SMITH, WILLIAM RUSSELL, lawyer, author, and representative in Congress, was born March 27, 1815, in Russellville, Ky., and died in Washington, February 26, 1896; son of Ezekial and Elizabeth (Hampton) Smith, the former a captain in the War of 1812, a pioneer and planter of Kentucky, whose death occurred at Bowling Green, the latter who was a descendant of the Lowrys, Russells, and Hamptons; great-grandson of William Russell Smith, and grandnephew of General William Russell Smith of Virginia, for whom Russellville, Ky., was named. After the death of his father he moved with his mother, brothers and sisters to Huntsville, where they remained for a while and then removed to Tuscaloosa. In 1823, the mother died leaving the children in straightened circumstances. They were taken into different homes, he being taken to the home of a Mrs. Potts, from where he soon ran away, and joined his brother Sidney. His sister Louisa married William A. McDaniel, a tailor, and he worked in his brother-in-law's shop for some time. Gen. George W. Crabb, realizing the boy's genius, was eager to assist him, and advanced him the money for his education. In 1826, or 1827, he entered the school taught by Dr. Reuben Searcy, and in 1829, the school of Rev. Nathaniel H. Harris, M. A., where he spent two years, preparing for college. On the opening day of the University of Alabama, in the spring of 1831, at the age of sixteen years, he entered the University, but was never graduated being compelled, from the necessity of earning a livelihood, to leave the university in 1834. He then entered the law office of Gen. Crabb, and at the end of one year was admitted to the bar. At the age of twenty years, he began the practice of his profession at Greensboro, 1835. His brother, Sidney, was killed in the Goliad massacre of March 27, 1836, which news he received after returning from the Creek War. He had raised a company of mounted infantry of which he was elected captain, and had proceeded, in the regiment commanded by Col. Joseph P. Frazier, to the seat of war, reaching there only to find that the war had closed. On learning of his brother's death, he recruited a company of Texans, to avenge his death and that of other American patriots. The company only got as far as Mobile, however, when news was received of the victory of the Texans at the battle of San Jacinto. He remained in Mobile for a while, devoted himself to literature for a year, and soon established a magazine, "The Bachelor's Button", a monthly periodical, the first number of which was published in December, 1836. The first four numbers of this magazine were published in Mobile, but in 1837, he removed to Tuscaloosa, where the fifth and the sixth numbers were published. The publishing of the magazine was discontinued in 1837. He resumed the practice of law at Tuscaloosa, in 1838 became editor of "The Monitor", a Whig newspaper, and in 1839, was elected mayor. He supported Gen. William Henry Harrison for president in 1840, and in 1841, and 1842, was elected as a Whig to the general assembly of Alabama, which met in Tuscaloosa, then the capital. He severed his connection with the Whig party, in 1843, because of his opposition to Henry Clay's views on the tariff and other questions. During these years he was a frequent contributor to "The Southron", a Tuscaloosa magazine. In 1844, he removed to Fayette, was elected brigadier-general of the militia, and continued the law practice. In 1850, Gen. Smith was elected judge of the circuit court over Judge Chapman, but in 1851, resigned to take his seat in Congress, to which he had been elected over Hon. John Erwin of Greene County, and it was during that session that he received the national reputation as the "Kossuth-Killer", being most influential in preventing the foreign entanglement into which the United States was being led by espousing Louis Kossuth's cause, Kossuth's purpose being to enlist the active aid of the United States in the behalf of Hungary against Austria and Russia. He was re-elected to Congress in 1853, over Sydenham Moore and S. F. Hale of Greene County and in 1855, was again elected to congress for his third term, but was defeated in the election of 1856, by Judge Sydenham Moore, and resumed his law practice in Tuscaloosa. He was invited by the Alabama Alpha of Phi Beta Kappa, to read a poem at the commencement of the University in 1860, and this poem "The Uses of Solitude", is considered by many critics to place him among the great American poets. In 1861, he was a delegate to the state convention at Montgomery, and upon the adjournment of the convention, in 1861, he returned home and raised the Sixth Alabama battalion, which afterwards became the Twenty-sixth Alabama regiment, of which he was commissioned colonel. He went into camp for instruction, but left soon afterwards for the Confederate house of representatives, to which he had been elected, and which he served in that body from the beginning of the war to the end in 1865. After the close of the war, he ran for governor, 1865, but was defeated, and in 1873, was defeated for congress. He resumed his practice in Tuscaloosa, and also engaged in literary pursuits, translating into English couplets, parts of Homer's "Iliad". He, also, under a joint resolution of the general assembly, began a condensation of the Alabama reports, which were published in ten volumes, the first in 1870, and the tenth in 1879. They covered all the reports from Minor to the Eighth Alabama reports. He was elected president of the University of Alabama, in 1870, which position he held for about a year, when he retired. In 1879, he removed with his family to Washington, where he practiced law, and devoted himself to literary pursuits for the remainder of his life. In the early eighties, he edited and published "The Law-Central", to which he contributed a series of exhaustive studies in criminal insanity. He was the author of: "College Musings", in 1833; "The Bridal Eve", 1834; "Hard Cider", 1840; "War and Its Incidents", published in the "Southern Quarterly Review", of January, 1848; "Kossuth and His Mission", a speech made in the house of representatives, January 15, 1855; "The American Party and Its Mission", speech in the house of representatives, January 15, 1855; "The Uses of Solitude", 1860; "As It Is", 1860; "History and Debates of the Convention", 1861; "The Royal Ape", 1863; "Diomedes, from Homer's 'Iliad'", 1869; "Key to Homer's 'Iliad'", 1872; "Polyxena, a Tragedy", 1879; "Assassination and Insanity: Guiteau's Case Examined", 1881; "Reminiscences of a Long Life", 1889; "Was It A Pistol: A Nut for Lawyers", 1890, and "Aaron Burr, a Tragedy," which was produced, he himself, playing a part. He was a Catholic. Married: (1) in 1843, to Jane Binion, who died in 1844, daughter of John H. and Elizabeth (Strong) Binion, the latter who was a member of one of the leading families of New Lexington; (2) in 1847, at Fayette, to Mary Jane Murray, who died in 1863, daughter of James and Mary (Moore) Murray, who were early pioneers of Jefferson and Fayette Counties, the former who was at one time sheriff of Jackson County; (3) in 1854, at Washington, to Wilhelmine M. Easby, daughter of Capt. William and Ann Agnes Maria (King) Easby, the former who came from a Yorkshire family, early settling in Philadelphia, and the latter who was also of English descent; granddaughter of Benjamin and Hannah (Davis) King, the former who was a soldier in the Revolutionary War, and afterwards settled in Baltimore, and the latter who was a lineal descendant of Richard Miles, who settled in the early part of the seventeenth century, on the "Welch Tract", in New Castle County, Pa. SMITHSON, NOBLE, lawyer, was born December 7, 1841, near Nolensville, Williamson County, Tenn.; son of John Greene and Ann Vaughn (Ladd) Smithson, the former who was a native of Danville, Va., who later came to Alabama and thence to Georgia, and was a planter, and the latter who was a native of Williamson County, Tenn.; grandson of Ezekiah Powell and Henrietta (Carter) Smithson, who were natives of Virginia, and of Noble and Mary (Burton) Ladd, the former who was a native of Rockingham County, N. C., and the latter of Stokes County, N. C.; great-grandson of Francis Smithson and of Peter Burton, who was a native of Ireland; great-great-grandson of Capt. Powell, a veteran of the Revolutionary War. Both the Smithson and Ladd families were of English descent, the Smithsons coming from Northumberland County, England, to Virginia before the Revolution. Mr. Smithson's education was obtained in the old field schools of his neighborhood, and in early life he was a salesman and bookkeeper in a country store, and later taught a country school. He studied medicine for a while, but soon gave that up and studied law. In December, 1866, he was admitted to the bar at Pulaski, Tenn., and continued to practice at Pulaski, in the courts of Tennessee, and the supreme court of Tennessee, until March 1, 1887, when he removed to Birmingham. He was district attorney general of the eleventh circuit of Tennessee, composed of Williamson, Maury, Marshall, Giles, Lawrence, Wayne, and Lewis Counties, from November, 1867, to September, 1870. He was state senator in the Tennessee legislature from 1873-74, was chairman of the senate committee on judiciary, and was chairman of a special committee appointed to investigate the affairs of the bank of Tennessee. While residing in Tennessee, he was a state director in the Nashville and Decatur railroad company, a director in the National bank of Pulaski, and served as special judge of the circuit courts, by appointment of the governor. In 1888, when the American national bank of Birmingham was organized, he was elected one of its directors, and also attorney for the bank, which position he held until the bank went into liquidation, in 1892. In 1889, he made application to the president of the United States for the office of district attorney for the northern and middle district of Alabama, but the office was tendered to another applicant. He was nominated republican candidate for governor of the state, June 4, 1890, but declined the nomination, being ineligible to the office because he had not been a resident of the state seven years. SPROTT, SAMUEL HENRY, lawyer, was born June 24, 1840, near Gaston, Sumter County; son of Robert and Mary (Bothwell) Sprott, the former who was born in County Down, Ireland, came to America in 1838, and in January, 1840, settled in Sumter County, was engaged in farming until his death; grandson of James and Margaret (Hamilton) Sprott, who resided in County Down, Ireland, and of Arthur and Mary (Adams) Bothwell, who were residents of County Down, Ireland. The great-grandfathers on both sides were Scotch of the Clan Douglas, and were both at the battle of Culloden on the side of Charles Edward the Pretender. After the battle they made their escape to the north of Ireland. The name "Sprott" was originally "Spratt," the change in spelling evidently being brought about by a differentiation in pronunciation. Samuel H. Sprott was educated in the old field schools of Sumter County. He entered the C. S. Army in March, 1862, and served as first lieutenant of Co. A, and later as captain of Co. B, Fortieth Alabama infantry regiment. After the war he studied law in the office of Chancellor Thomas Cobbs; was admitted to the bar in 1867; practiced continuously in Livingston until his appointment as judge of the sixth judicial circuit, March 18, 1883; held this position by successive re-elections until 1910, then declined to stand for re-election; in 1910 was elected to represent Pickens and Sumter Counties in the State senate, and re-elected in 1913. He is a Democrat; a ruling elder in the Presbyterian church; and a Mason. He is author of a history of the Fortieth Alabama infantry regiment, C. S. A. Married: on December 23, 1868, at Livingston, to Leonora Brockway, daughter of Dr. Augustus E. and Martha E. (Horn) Brockway, the former who was a native of Connecticut, the latter a daughter of

Jacob and Mary Horn, natives of North Carolina. Children: 1. Mary Augusta, m. Thomas L. Long; 2. Mattie Bothwell, m. Thomas H. Robertson; 3. Nonie Belle, m. J. O. Long; 4. S. H., jr.; 5. Margaret Bothwell; 6. Robert. Residence: Livingston.

SPROTT, SAMUEL HENRY, Jr., lawyer, was born September 4, 1879, at Livingston; son of Samuel Henry and Leonora (Brockway) Sprott (q. v.). The early education of S. H. Sprott, jr., was received in the Livingston male academy, and he later attended the University of Alabama, 1894-98, graduating in that latter year, A. B. He then attended the law department of the University of Alabama, graduating LL. B., in 1902. During the years 1891-1901, he taught school with Julius T. Wright at the University military school at Mobile; entered the practice of law at Tuscaloosa in 1903, forming a partnership with A. S. Van de Graaff; was U. S. commissioner for the northern district of Alabama, 1906-12; and was elected president of the board of commissioners of Tuscaloosa, July, 1911. He is a Democrat, was a member of the state convention in 1910, and 1912; a deacon in the First Presbyterian church at Tuscaloosa; a Royal Arch Mason; and a Knight Templar. Residence: Tuscaloosa.

ST. PAUL, HENRY, lawyer, was born October 15, 1815, at Antwerp, Belgium, and died February 26, 1886, at New Orleans; son of Andre St. Paul de Léchard, a native of Paris, France, who served in Napoleon's Army and was wounded at Waterloo. The name de Léchard, was dropped during the French revolution, resumed afterwards, but again fell into disuse after Henry St. Paul's emigration to America. His early boyhood was spent in Paris, where he studied art, and in 1830, he came to America, and settled in New Orleans. He attended law school at the Transylvania university, Ky., was graduated LL. B., in 1841 and in the same year was admitted to practice by the supreme court of Louisiana. He practiced law in New Orleans from 1841, until the War of Secession. He was a member of the constitutional convention of Louisiana in 1862, and in 1856, was elected to the State senate.

As commander of the New Orleans legion of artillery, in June, 1856, he was ordered by Gen. Palfrey to defend the state arsenal against an expected attack from the Know-Nothings, and later he, with Hon. T. J. Semmes, carried on a political campaign against the same party in the region of the Attakapas. At the outbreak of the War of Secession, he resigned his command of the Orleans artillery, and organized and equipped, at his own expense, a company of "Chasseurs-a-pied," foot rifles, of which he was captain. The Chasseurs were ordered to Fort Pickens, and remained there until 1862. The battalion was then transferred to active service in Virginia. He was promoted to lieutenant-colonel, and then major; was transferred to the Trans Mississippi, to the staff of Gen. Dick Taylor; and was then transferred to the quartermaster's department at Mobile. He participated in the battle of Seven Pines, was at Ft. Morgan when Farragut passed up the bay, and at the time of surrender was stationed at Mobile. After the war he removed to Mobile, and resumed his law practice, until his death. He was auditor of the city of Mobile about 1880; from 1865-72, he was editor of the Mobile "Times"; and at intervals from 1872-80, was editor of the Mobile "Register." He was a contributor to the Mobile Sunday papers, and among his articles was a "Weekly Review of European Politics." He was a Democrat, and a Catholic. Married: in April, 1843, at New Orleans, La., to Amanda Eugenie Puchen, daughter of Jules Puchen of New Orleans. Children: 1. Stella, deceased, m. Philip La Barthe; 2. Regina, deceased, m. John L. Rapier; 3. Alba, Mobile, m. George A. Russell, deceased; 4. Oneida, New Orleans; 5. Amanda, deceased, a Sister of Charity; 6. John, judge of court of appeals, New Orleans, La.; 7. STALLWORTH, NICHOLAS, JR., farmer, was born February 21, 1810, in Edgefield District, S. C., and died in 1853, son of Nicholas and Polly (Adams) Stallworth (q. v.). When he was eight years of age he came with the remainder of his father's family to Alabama, at a time when few or no schools existed, and he had to depend altogether on self-training. He was at one time circuit clerk of Conecuh County, and in 1850, when the office of judge of probate was made elective, he was influential in getting A. D. Carey to be a candidate. Married: to Martha Travis, daughter of Rev. Alexander Travis (q. v.). Among the seven children born to this union were: 1. Robert P., deceased, m. Pollie A. Mosely; 2. Nicholas, Jr., Capt. Co. F, First battalion, Hilliard's legion, C. S. A., promoted to Major, Twenty-third battalion, Alabama volunteers, C. S. A., March, 1864, tax assessor, Falls County, m. Lucy M. Turk; 3. a daughter, who died, m. Hon. Samuel A. Barnett; 4. Frank M., of Falls County, Tex. Last residence: Conecuh County.

STALLWORTH, NICHOLAS, lawyer, was born August 9, 1845, at Evergreen and died June 9, 1909, at Evergreen; son of James Adams and Harriet Emeline (Crosby) Stallworth (q. v.). He received a good common school education, and leaving school at the age of fourteen, accompanied his father to Washington, where he spent the winters of 1859, 1860, and 1861. In the latter year he returned with his father to Conecuh, and at once joined the Conecuh guards, C. S. Army. He refused the commission of lieutenant in the regular army, preferring to take his place in the ranks. He went into Virginia, with the Fourth Alabama Regiment, and served in all the campaigns and battles participated in by the regiment until at the battle of Cold Harbor, when he was wounded. He returned home, soon after entered the junior class of the University of Alabama, 1863, and the degree of A. B. was conferred upon him as a member of the class of 1864, whose university course was interrupted by service in the C. S. Army. His health failed him and eight months later, he returned to his home. He was offered a position on the staff of Gen. Samuel Adams, but before he could respond to the offer, Gen. Adams was killed. He was then offered a position on the staff of Gen. Thomas C. Hindman, but declined, and subsequently he accepted the adjutancy of the Twenty-third regiment of Alabama, then under the command of Maj. Nick Stallworth. He left his home and succeeded in getting as far as Petersburg, when the communication was cut off between that place and Richmond, and after several attempts to reach his command he returned home. After the close of the war, he studied law with P. D. Page, and was soon after admitted to practice. He represented Conecuh County in the legislature, in 1872, and again in 1874, and at the session of 1875-76, was elected solicitor of the eleventh judicial circuit. He continued in the active practice of his profession and was a successful planter until his death. He was a Democrat, Episcopalian, Knight of Pythias, and a Mason. Cato and Martha (Tomlinson) Riddle, the former who was a veteran of the Revolutionary War. The first William Stansel resided in Barnwell District, S. C., while the Riddles came from Chatham County, N. C., to Washington County, Ga. Col. Stansel came to Pickens County with his parents about 1831 or 1832, and there received a good common school education. He entered the University of Alabama at Tuscaloosa, in 1840, and was graduated A. B., 1843, and A. M., in 1846. He began the study of law under Judge Peter Martin, in 1844, and in December, 1845, was admitted to the practice of law, before the State supreme court at Tuscaloosa. He then went to Carrollton where he practiced continuously, except for four years spent in the C. S. Army, until his death. He was elected judge of the county court by the legislature, in 1849. The probate court system was adopted in this year, and in May, 1850, he was defeated for the office of judge by Tristram Sandy Thomas. He was elected to the legislature in 1861 and in 1862, he joined the C. S. Army, as major of the Forty-first Alabama regiment of infantry, which was composed of men from Tuscaloosa, Greene, and Pickens Counties. He was soon promoted to the rank of colonel, and participated in the battles of Murfreesboro, Jackson, Miss., Chickamauga, Drewry's Bluff, and in front of Richmond and Petersburg in the closing months of the war. He was wounded at Murfreesboro. On the illness of Gen. Moody, Col. Stansel commanded the brigade consisting of the Forty-first, Forty-third, Fifty-ninth, and Sixtieth Alabama regiments, and the Twenty-third Alabama battalion, in the battle of White Oak Road, and on the retreat to Appomattox, where he surrendered it. He returned to his home and was elected to the constitutional convention of 1865, and in the same year was elected to the State senate, where he served until 1868. For twenty years, following his term as senator, he continued his practice of law. He was, however, in 1888, elected to represent the lower house, and in 1890, was chosen to the senate for four years, where he served as chairman of the judiciary committee. In 1896, he was again elected to the lower house, and served as chairman of the joint committee of both houses on the code. He was a trustee of the University of Alabama, 1856-62, 1892-1900; of the Auburn polytechnic college; of the Agricultural and mechanical college, 1872-92; and was president of the Alabama State Bar Association, 1882-83. He was one of the corresponding editors of the "Southern Law Journal," which was conducted by A. B. McEachin, of Tuscaloosa, 1878-79, and contributed the papers: "The Code of 1876, and the Common Law," "Evidence-Compensation of Experts," "Ad Quod Damnum," and "Champerly." He was a Democrat, was a delegate to and attended the Democratic National Conventions of 1856 and 1876, and from 1868, to 1874, was chairman of the executive committee of Pickens County, and was a Baptist. STEEDMAN, ISIAH G. W., physician and colonel, C. S. Army, for a number of years a resident of Alabama, was born in Lexington County, S. C., in 1835. He entered the South Carolina military academy, 1852, graduated 1856; attended the South Carolina medical college; graduated, 1859, from a school of medicine in New Orleans; began to practice in Wilcox County; entered the Confederate Army as captain, and in 1862 was promoted to the colonelcy of the 1st Alabama infantry regiment; removed to Missouri, 1866, resuming the practice of medicine. Married: in October, 1865, at St. Louis, Mo., to Dora, daughter of James Harrison and wife, of that place. Residence: St. Louis, Mo.

STEELE, ABNER N., physician, was born July 9, 1860, in Northport, Tuscaloosa County; son of Abner N. and Eleanor C. (Thompson) Steele, the former who was a pharmacist at Northport, enlisted in the Eleventh Alabama infantry, C. S. Army, and was killed at the battle of Frazer's farm, in Virginia, in 1862, grandson of Dr. Matthew and Annabelle (Keys) Thompson. His education was obtained in the public schools of Greene County, and later he attended an institution at Okolona. After spending eight years, traveling in the north and west, from Canada to Montana and down to Texas, he returned to Alabama and commenced to read medicine with Dr. W. H. Sanders of Mobile. In 1890, he was graduated from the medical college at Mobile, and in 1891, he was interne in the Charity hospital there. He then removed to Bethany, Pickens County, where he practiced for two years, after which he signed a contract as surgeon for the Worthington Ore Company, in Jefferson County. He later settled in Columbus, Miss., where he continued to practice, until 1896, when he removed to Anniston. He has become a member of a drug firm, in addition to his professional work. STEELE, JOHN ANTHONY, lawyer, probate judge Colbert County, member Alabama legislature and Secession convention of 1861, planter, was born July 25, 1835, at Gainesville, Sumter County, and died March 9, 1916, at Tuscumbia; son of William Jerimison and Mary D. (Winston) Steele, the former a native of Woodford County, Ky., born August 10, 1809 and died January 11, 1884, at Versailles, Ky., read law with John J. Crittendon at Frankfort, was admitted to the bar in Kentucky, elected county judge several times, planter; grandson of John and Annie Steele who lived near Versailles, Ky., the former a native of Ireland, sheriff of Woodford County, Ky., member of the legislature of that State representing the Whig party, a Presbyterian and officer of the War of 1812, and of Anthony and Sarah (Watson) Winston, the former a native of Virginia who settled in Tuscumbia in 1818, and was a member of the first legislature of this State. The great-grandfather Thomas Steele, with his brother, Andrew, came to America from Londonderry, Ireland, during the latter part of the 18th Century. They were of Scotch-Irish Presbyterian ancestry and among the earliest pioneer settlers of Kentucky, contemporaries of Daniel Boone in wresting Kentucky from the Indians. The paternal great-grandfather, Anthony Winston, sr., married Zekiah Jones of Virginia, the former a member of the Virginia house of burgesses, member of the Virginia convention of 1775, which voted to arm the colony and virtually declared war on Great Britain, and was a captain in the Revolutionary War. Mr. Steele received his early education in his native town and at Versailles, Ky. He held the unique distinction of being the youngest graduate of Princeton university, being but sixteen in 1852, when he received his diploma in the classical course of that institution. He studied law at Transylvania university, Lexington, Ky., and at Marietta, Ohio; was admitted to the bar in 1854, and located at Tuscumbia. He was a member of the Secession convention of 1861, and vigorously opposed the State's withdrawal from the Union, but when the contrary opinion prevailed he threw his whole energy with the cause of the Confederacy. Early in 1862 he was made 2nd Lieutenant in William Julian's company, Jeff Forrest's regiment. After Streight's raid he was promoted captain of Co. F, 11th Alabama, Brutwell's regiment, Forrest brigade, Buford division of N. B. Forrest's cavalry. This promotion was in recognition of his "gallant service in the battle of the Day's Gap." He was with the gallant Forrest through all his Mississippi, Alabama and Tennessee campaigns; was captured near Selma, 1865, and carried prisoner to Macon, Ga., where with other soldiers he was paroled by Wilson, colonel of the 7th Ohio regiment. Along with all Confederate soldiers who had served in any official position he was disfranchised by act of congress but in 1870 his pardon was gotten for him by Senator Warner. After the war he engaged in farming; was later appointed internal revenue collector for Alabama by Pres. U. S. Grant and was confirmed by the senate, but declined the office. He was elected to the Alabama legislature, on the Democratic ticket, 1870-71-72, and in 1878-79, as a Republican. In 1880 he was elected probate judge of Colbert County and in 1886 re-elected, serving twelve years in that position. He was appointed register for the U. S. land office at Huntsville by Pres. William McKinley; was deputy U. S. marshal under Pope Long, with headquarters in Birmingham; appointed receiver of public money, by Presidents Roosevelt and Taft and held-over under the latter appointment through a portion of President Woodrow Wilson's administration, resigning on account of ill health. He was a delegate to the Republican convention, Chicago, in 1900, and took a keen interest in that party until his death. He was a Mason; Presbyterian; Knight of Honor; and Knight of Pythias. Married: April 3, 1856, in Tuscumbia, to Martha Bacon, daughter of William and Judith McCraw (Jones) Winston, of that place. Children: 1. William Winston, Tuscumbia; 2. John Anthony; 3. Thomas Winston; 4. Annie Helen, m. Otey Figures; 5. Mary Bacon, m. Robert Lee Armistead, Washington, D. C.; 6. Judith McCraw, m. Edward Lane Goodloe, Tuscumbia; 7. STOLLENWERCK, FRANK, banker, lumberman and real estate dealer, was born September 20, 1860, at Marion, died July 30, 1912, while on a business trip in the west, and is buried in Montgomery; son of Augustus Gustavus and Julia Frances (Fowlkes) Stollenwerck, who was educated in the famous Green Spring school conducted by Henry Tutwiler, member of the 24th Alabama infantry regiment, C. S. Army, lived successively in Greensboro, Marion and Birmingham; grandson of Louie Marie Augustus and Aimé Françoise (Coupéry) Stollenwerck who lived in France, and moved thence to San Domingo, coming later to New York and finally in 1820, to Alabama, and of Edward Taylor and Mary Ann (Foster) Fowlkes, who lived at Franklinton, N. C., and later located in Alabama. Mr. Stollenwerck was educated in private schools, and received a preparatory course at the Dallas academy, Selma. He was not privileged to attend college as he went to work at the age of fifteen. Reaching manhood, he entered the cotton business in Selma, going in 1885 to Anniston where he did an extensive brokerage business. The following year he removed to Greenville where for six years he was cashier in the bank of Joseph Steiner and son. About 1888 his brother-in-law, Willie Herbert Calhoun, became secretary and treasurer of the Dunham lumber co., at Dunham, and through him Mr. Stollenwerck was induced to invest in stock in the company. A few years later after the death of Mr. Calhoun, in 1898, whose foreseeing business policy had acquired large tracts of virgin pine, Mr. Stollenwerck bought out the interest of the president, Capt. D. B. McKenzie, and thus became sole proprietor of the business, and continued that connection until 1907 when he moved to Montgomery and entered the real estate, lumber and banking business, being vice-president of the First national bank of that city at the time of his death. In 1911, he was city commissioner of Montgomery but served for part of his term only, resigning for lack of time to perform the duties of the position. STREET, THOMAS ATKINS, planter, probate judge, major 49th Alabama infantry regiment, was born July 30, 1838, at Warrenton, Marshall County, and died December 12, 1904, at Guntersville; son of Oliver Day and Mary Ann (Atkins) Street, the former a native of Winchester, Tenn., born 1810, a Cumberland Presbyterian minister; grandson of William Henry and Elizabeth (Herndon) Street of Winchester, Tenn., the former a native of Halifax County, Virginia, born in 1771 and died in Winchester, Tenn., December, 1836, and of Thomas and Rebecca (Tate) Atkins, of Warrenton, the former a native of Laurens District, S. C., who settled in Madison County in 1813, a substantial farmer and soldier of the War of 1812. The earliest American ancestor was Anthony Street of Halifax County, Va., whom tradition says fought in the Revolutionary War and who about 1805, with his wife, Elizabeth, settled at Winchester, Tenn., where he died in 1825. Mr. Street was educated in the public schools near his home; at Somerville, Morgan County, and at Cumberland university, Lebanon, Tenn., where he graduated in 1859 with the degree of A. B. He returned to Warrenton and at once assumed the management of a large plantation, of which he was the owner and which was well stocked with negro slaves. In 1874 he was elected probate judge of Marshall County, and re-elected in 1880, and 1886 and 1892. He, in November, 1861, enlisted as a private in a company, organized for the Confederate service. This company was ordered to Nashville, Tenn., where it became Co. E, 29th Alabama infantry regiment, C. S. Army. Capt. Montgomery Gilbraith, having been elected lieutenant-colonel of the regiment, Mr. Street was chosen captain. While at Nashville the regiment was chiefly engaged in drilling and outpost duty. About the time of the fall of Ft. Donelson and the consequent retreat of the Confederate forces from Nashville, the 49th Alabama infantry regiment had become disorganized, and had lost nearly two hundred men by a most virulent type of measles and camp fever. The colonel retired from the army and the regiment at this crisis, was reorganized with Jephtha E. Edmonds, as colonel, John D. Weedon as lieutenant-colonel, and Thomas A. Street as major. At this time the latter was suffering from measles and camp fever and was unable to rejoin his regiment until after the battle of Shiloh. On his return, the command of regiment devolved upon him, owing to the absence of the colonel and the lieutenant-colonel, and he was in command at Corinth, and at Port Hudson, where by the surrender of that post on July 9, 1863, he became a prisoner of war, and passed the remaining period in Federal prisons at Ft. Delaware, Point Lookout, and Johnson's Island, Lake Erie. He arrived home in August, 1865, to find the dwelling and improvements on his plantation all swept away by the devastations of the Federal Army. He was a Democrat until 1892, when he joined the People's party. He was a Methodist and a Mason. Married: December 6, 1865, at Beard's Bluff, to Julia Ann, daughter of Arthur Campbell and Pherriba Jane (Moore) Beard, all of Beard's Bluff, and great-granddaughter of Col. Arthur Campbell of Southwest Virginia. Children: 1. Oliver Day, m. Emma Lusk, Guntersville (q. v.); 2. Jane Moore, m. Edward F. Whitman, Boaz; 3. Arthur B., d. in infancy; 4. Thomas Atkins, m. Lallie Abercombie, Manila, P. I.; 5. Julia, m. William E. Snead, Boaz; 6. Mary Tate, d. unmarried, Boaz; 7. Edwin Campbell, m. Dora Ferguson, Waco, Tex.; 8. Ernestine, d. unmarried; 9. Rebecca, d. in infancy. Last residence: Guntersville.

STREET, JOHN P., merchant and planter, was born February 14, 1820, in Bladen County, N. C., and died at Hayneville, June 22, 1894; son of William and Anne Jane (Poynter) Street, both of North Carolina, the former having been sheriff of his county for twenty-one years. John P. Streety was born on a farm, received a limited education in the county schools, later attended school at Fayetteville, N. C.; moved to Apalachicola, Fla., 1835; and the following year removed to Butler County where he spent one year in the office of his brother who was circuit court clerk. He finally removed to Lowndes County where he engaged in the mercantile business for over fifty years. He joined Co. D, 53rd Alabama infantry (mounted), Hannon's regiment, and was in the office of the quartermaster of the regiment, receiving his discharge in South Carolina, May, 1865, and returning to Alabama on horseback. He was appointed county commissioner by Gov. George S. Houston. He was a Baptist. Married: (1) in 1864, to Anna, daughter of Ebenezer Martin, of New York; (2) April 22, 1854, to Eleanor, daughter of Hugh and Mary (McCall) McCall, of Lowndes County. There were two children by each wife, but one, by the second died in infancy. Children: 1. Cynthia L., m. Dr. J. P. Muskat; 2. TAIT, JOHN, Indian agent. See Indian chiefs and associated characters.

TAIT, PORTER KING, physician, was born September 6, 1869, at Camden, Wilcox County; son of Major Felix and Narcissa (Goree) Tait (q. v.). Dr. Tait received his early education in the common schools of Wilcox County, and in the private school of Prof. Vaiden, at Marion. He obtained his professional education in the medical department at Mobile, of the University of Alabama, and in Birmingham medical college, graduating, 1903, in the latter. In May, 1903, he began the practice at Dora, as physician for the Sloss-Sheffield steel and iron co. In the Spanish-American War he was quartermaster of Co. A, 1st Alabama infantry regiment, the company commanded by Captain W. J. Parke. He is a Democrat; a Baptist; and a Mason. Married: September 19, 1901, at Birmingham, to Daisie, daughter of Jacob Kemps and Amanda L. (Hanby) Billheimer of Dayton, Ohio, the former a native of Virginia and for twenty years a missionary in Africa, and the latter born and reared in Westerville, Ohio. Children: 1. Porter King, jr.; 2. Albert Lewis. Address: Birmingham.

TALBIRD, HENRY, Baptist minister, colonel C. S. Army, was born November 7, 1811, on Hilton Head Island, Beaufort District, S. C.; grandson of John Talbird, a commissioned officer in the Revolutionary Army. His ancestors were among the earliest settlers and prominent citizens of South Carolina. He was educated at Madison university, New York, taking a full collegiate and theological course at that place. After graduating from the theological department in 1841, he was called to the pastorate of the Baptist church at Tuscaloosa, and served at that place for one year. He accepted a call to Montgomery, and remained in charge of the Baptist church there for nine years, at the end of which time he was elected to the professorship of theology of Howard college, at Marion, assuming the chair in January, 1852. At the close of his first year on the faculty of the college, he was elected president and maintained that position until the beginning of the War of Secession. In 1861 he entered the C. S. Army as captain of a company in the Seventh Alabama infantry regiment, and at the close of the first campaign became colonel and organized the Forty-first Alabama regiment. After three years' service he was compelled to resign his commission because of ill health. After the close of the war, his health was still poor, and he accepted a country pastorate, where the duties were not so heavy as in his former charges. He spent two and a half years in Carlowville, Dallas County, then as his health remained feeble, resigned his pastorate and spent some time in travels. Six months later he accepted the charge of the Baptist church at Henderson, Ky., and remained there for three years; became pastor of the First Baptist church at Lexington, Mo., April 11, 1872, and continued in that charge for many years. The degree of D. D. was conferred upon Dr. Talbird, by the University of Alabama in 1854. He was elected a trustee of William Jewell college, and served as president of its board of education. Last residence: Lexington, Mo.

TATE, JAMES MADISON, lawyer, Methodist minister, teacher, and Confederate soldier, was born December 29, 1837, at Girard; son of Thomas Stribling and Mariah Louisa (Reed) Tate, the former a native of Edgefield Court House, S. C., who removed to Russell County, where he was sheriff, county clerk, and probate judge, later moving to Macon County where he was elected to the State legislature, a supporter of Bell and Everett in the presidential campaign of 1860, signer of the ordinance of secession, 1861, and quartermaster general in the home guards; grandson of Samuel and Frances (Stribling) Tate, of Edgefield, S. C., the former a captain in the War of 1812, and of Stephen and Delilah Reed, of Gainesville, Ga., the former having served under General Marion in the Revolutionary War. The Tates are of Scotch-Irish descent, coming from County Cork, Ireland, to America during the seventeenth century. Professor Tate received his early education in the old field schools of Alabama; spent two years at Emory college, Oxford, Ga.; took a law course at Cumberland university, Tenn., and was licensed to practice in Wilson County, Tenn. Receiving a telegram from Capt. Cullen Battle to report for service as a member of the Tuskegee light infantry against John Brown's raid, he left for Tuskegee, arriving after John Brown had been captured. He then attended the law school of Chancellor Wade Keys, took an examination before the supreme court of Alabama and in June, 1860, was granted license to practice. He became a member of the firm of Belser, Rice and Tate. In December, 1860, as a member of the Tuskegee light infantry, he reported for duty in Montgomery. As a private in Co. C, 3rd Alabama infantry regiment he participated in the capture of the Pensacola navy yard, January 12, 1861. On May 1, 1862, he reenlisted for the war and held all the commissions from sergeant to first lieutenant. He was wounded three times at Malvern Hill, South Mountain, Md., and Bloody Angle Spottsylvania Court House. He was detailed to recruit the depleted ranks of his company and later was assigned by Governor Watts to Buford's cavalry. After the war he began teaching near Tuskegee and in the spring of 1866 opened a high school for boys at Tuskegee. He was marshal of Tuskegee, in 1866, and county surveyor, in 1870. In 1878 he removed to Florida and for eight years was principal of the Roberts and Ferry Pass schools, relinquishing the principalship of the latter at that time and for thirty-five consecutive years serving as principal of the former. He was justice of the peace, third district of Florida, 1881; legislator, 1885-86; executive committeeman, 1888-1903, and justice of the peace, 1914-18. A high school has been built at Gonzalez, Fla., and named the James M. Tate agricultural school, in recognition of his lengthy service as an educator. For fifty-one years he has been a local minister of the Alabama conference, Methodist Episcopal church, South. He is a Democrat and an Odd Fellow. Married: January 31, 1867, at Tuskegee, to Elizabeth, daughter of Batte Peterson and Mary (Thweatt) Clark, of that place the former a veteran of the Mexican War and Confederate Army. Children: 1. Mariah Louisa, m. John D. Cary; 2. Mollie Frances, deceased. Residence: Pensacola, Fla.

TATOM, THOMAS, soldier of the American Revolution. "Mr. Clay, yielding to his feelings excited in behalf of the son of a Revolutionary Patriot, who was captured at Mier, a citizen of Alabama, addressed a letter to President Santa Anna, requesting his liberation. We understand that he has just received a polite letter from Santa Anna, informing him of the prompt discharge of the captive according to his request."—Lexington Observer. [The person alluded to above was Mr. Thomas Tatom, son of Capt. Tatom of Morgan county, Ala.]—Southern Advocate, Huntsville, Ala., Oct. 25, 1844, p. 2.

TATUM, BERRY, wholesale grocer, was born March 26, 1829, in Autauga County, and died September 11, 1895, in Montgomery; son of Peter E. and Martha (Gause) Tatum, the former was born in Greene County, Ga., 1796, came to Alabama when a youth, and was one of the commissioners appointed to convey the Seminole Indians from Florida to Arkansas; grandson of Howell Tatum, who was a native of Georgia and one of the first settlers of Alabama. The Tatum ancestors came from Ireland to America before the Revolution. He was educated in the schools of Montgomery and at Tuskegee military institute. His first position was that of clerk in Montgomery, 1847-49, and from 1849 until 1854 he was engaged in farming. In the latter year he entered the wholesale grocery business in Montgomery and for many years followed this business with the exception of 1863-65 when he was engaged in running the blockade for the Confederacy, carrying ammunition to the southern Army. He served as president and vice-president of the Capital City insurance company, and before the war served two terms as a councilman. He was a Mason; and a Baptist. Married: November 15, 1849, to Francis Jennette, daughter of Griffin L. Hogan, of South Carolina. Children: 1. Ella, d. in childhood; 2. Edward, d. unmarried; 3. Haywood, deceased, m. TAUL, MICAH, secretary of State, railroad commissioner, lawyer and planter, was born November 25, 1832, in Winchester, Tenn., and died February 13, 1873, at Mardisville; son of Micah and Mary (Hayter) Taul, the former born May 14, 1785, in Montgomery County, Md., about twelve miles north of Washington, D. C., and died in Talladega County, May 27, 1850, colonel of the Wayne County, Ky., volunteers in the War of 1812, his command joining Gen. Harrison on Lake Erie, September 11, 1812, being mustered out the following year, and in 1814 was elected to congress, representing his district one term, denying re-election; grandson of Arthur Thomas and Mary Anne (Johnson) Taul, the former a native of Bladensburg, Md., born in 1749, the latter of Clarksburg, Md., born March 11, 1830, removing to Fayette County, Ky. In 1784 Mr. Taul read law with Col. A. S. Colyar, and entered into a partnership under the firm name of Colyar, Carter and Taul. Owing to poor health he gave up the practice of law and devoted himself to agriculture, residing through the growing season upon his plantation at Mardisville, near Talladega, and spending the winters in Montgomery. He was secretary of the State senate, 1856-57, and became secretary of State during Governor Patton's administration, 1865-68. Upon the creation of a State railroad commission, he was named as one of the three members, and served from that date until his death. He was a lieutenant in a cavalry company organized at Talladega; a Democrat; and a Mason. Married: September 18, 1854, in Jackson County, to Louisiana Taul, daughter of Rev. Lewis and Sarah (Bradford) Roach, both natives of Virginia; granddaughter of Benjamin and Mary (McFarland) Bradford, the former was born February 15, 1774; great-granddaughter of Benjamin and Mary (Blackburn) of Virginia, the ancestors of the former belonging to the McFarland clan of Scotland, a Revolutionary soldier, a member of the 3rd Virginia regiment, commanded by Lieut.-Colonel Heth. TAYLOE, HENRY AUGUSTINE, planter, was born April 7, 1808, at the Octagon, Washington, D. C., and died July 15, 1903, at Gallion; son of John and Anne (Ogle) Tayloe, the former who was a native of Mount Airy, Richmond County, Va., who lived in Richmond, Va., and Washington, D. C., and was a personal friend of George Washington; grandson of Col. John and Rebecca (Plater) Tayloe, who lived at Mount Airy, and of Gov. Benjamin Ogle, who was first governor of Maryland when it was admitted to the statehood; great-grandson of William Tayloe, a native of London, England, who came to Richmond County, Va., in 1650, and became the proprietor of large estates, and of Gov. Ogle, provincial governor of Maryland; brother of John Tayloe, who was a cadet on the Constitution at the time of its battle with the Guerriere, and was a veteran of the war of 1812, of Benjamin Ogle, who was secretary of the American legation at London during the administration of President Monroe, of Edward Thornton Tayloe, who was secretary of the American legation in Mexico during the administration of the first President Harrison, and of Catherine Tayloe, who married an Englishman, James Baker, who was associated with the British legation in Washington, and who was afterwards transferred to Spain as consul at Corunna; and a nephew of William Augustine Washington, who was a nephew of George Washington. The Tayloe family intermarried with the Randolphs, Carters, Beverlys, Platers, Carys, Washingtons, Ogles, and Thorntons. Records of the family show that the name was originally Taylor. Capt. Tayloe's boyhood was spent in Washington, D. C., where he attended the grammar schools. He went to a preparatory school at Alexandria, and later entered the University of Virginia, which he left before graduating, due to his father's death. While there he was an intimate friend of Archibald Cary and the two Randolph boys, grandsons of Thomas Jefferson, and he spent much time at the latter's home in Monticello. He then went to Essex County, Va., to take charge of a plantation, and there he remained for about three years. In 1834, he removed to Alabama, and settled near Uniontown, then Woodville; later removed to Walnut Grove, near Prairieville; and still later removed to New Hope, near Macon station, Hale County, now Gallion. In 1846, during the Mexican War, he was captain of the Cherokee Legion, but succeeded in getting only as far as Mobile, when the war was ended. He was too old for active service during the War of Secession, but served as a member of the home guards, and assisted in building fortifications near Demopolis. He gave the first railroad the right of way in 1861, and at that time was serving as postmaster, which position he held for forty years. He was also notary public and justice of the peace. He was a Democrat, and a member of the Episcopal church, which he served as vestryman and senior warden, and was for twenty-seven years secretary of the Council for the Diocese of Alabama. Married: in 1838, to Narcissa Jamieson, daughter of John and Virginia (Adair) Jamieson, who lived at Uniontown, having come from Newberry, S. C., and settled in Alabama. Children: 1. Anne Ogle, m. (1) R. L. Maupin, deceased, (2) Dr. Samuel R. Olliphant, deceased; 2. Henrietta Key, d. in infancy; 3. Narcissa Elizabeth, m. Benjamin Francis Hatch, deceased, Gallion; 4. Henry Augustine, d. in infancy; 5. Charles, d. in infancy; 6. William Henry, m. Lucy Lea Langhorne, Uniontown; 7. Kate Beverly, m. David Woodfin Shivers, Montevallo; 8. Lucy Randolph, d. in infancy. Last residence: Gallion.

TAYLOE, WILLIAM HENRY, State senator, chancellor, member constitutional convention, 1901, was born August 26, 1852, at Prairieville, Marengo County, now Gallion, Hale County; son of Henry Augustine and Narcissa (Jamieson) Tayloe, the former a native of Washington, D. C., who lived in his ancestral home near Warsaw, Richmond County, Va., until 1834, when he removed to Prairieville, a planter, and captain of a cavalry company of militia but too old to serve in the Confederate Army; grandson of John and Anne (Ogle) Tayloe of Annapolis, Md., and of John Jamieson, a native of Newberry, S. C., who later located in Uniontown. He was educated by private instruction in his parental home and in schools taught by Prof. E. H. Murfee at Arcola, and E. L. Stickney at Lindes farm, near Marion, attended Washington and Lee university, Lexington, Va., 1869-78, during part of which time Gen. Robert E. Lee was president of the institution. He received the medal in 1873 for superior scholarship in modern languages and graduated with the degrees of B. A. and M. A. that year. In 1875 he received the B. L. degree; delivered the Cincinnati oration, the highest honor in the class, in 1874; and won two free scholarships on his merit. During his course in law, he had for his professors the eminent lawyers, John Randolph Tucker and C. A. Graves, the latter the successor at the University of Virginia of Prof. John B. Minor. He entered upon the practice of his profession November 1st, 1878, at Demopolis, subsequently removing to Linden and finally located at Uniontown. He was senator from Marengo County, 1886-90; Chancellor southwestern division of Alabama, 1898-1908; member of the constitutional convention of 1901; member of Uniontown council 1902-11. He is a Democrat; Episcopalian; Mason; and Knight of Pythias. Married: to Lucy Lea, daughter of Dr. John M. and Lucy (Lea) Langhorne of Uniontown, granddaughter of Henry C. Lea (q. v.). The Langhorne were natives of Virginia. The Leas were descended from George Reade, who was sent by Charles II as secretary of Virginia. Residence: Uniontown.

TAYLOR, BENJAMIN ASBURY, city chemist and bacteriologist for Montgomery; graduate of the Alabama polytechnic institute, with the degree of B. S., 1896, and M. S. 1897.

TAYLOR, C. B., member of the constitutional convention of 1785, from the eleventh election district.

TAYLOR, DAVID, pioneer, deceased, came to Alabama in 1812, from Augusta, Ga., where he had been a merchant, and settled in that business at Jackson. Married: in 1816, to Judith C. Parker, daughter of Jesse and Charlotte Parker, sister of William R. Parker. Among his children were: 1. TAYLOR, ELIJAH, soldier of the American Revolution, aged 81, and a resident of Limestone County; private and sergeant N. C. militia; enrolled on July 29, 1834, under act of Congress of June 7, 1832, payment to date from March 4, 1831; annual allowance, $33.33.—Revolutionary Pension Roll, in vol. xiv, Sen. doc. 514, 23rd Cong., 1st sess., 1833-34.

TAYLOR, GEORGE, a soldier of the American Revolution, was born in Virginia about 1762, and died in Madison County, 1826. In his seventeenth year he entered the Revolutionary Army; was under fire at the battle of Monmouth, 1778; was in the disastrous charge at King's Bridge, where only five, out of the advance guard of twenty, made good their retreat; was in South Carolina with "Light Horse Harry" Lee's command, serving in many battles and skirmishes; and at the end of the struggle held the rank of lieutenant. For more than ten years after the close of the war he commanded a scouting party, organized at Lexington, Ga., for the defense against the Indians; and he was also captain in the militia. From Georgia he moved first to Winchester, Tenn., 1805, and later, 1810, settled on the banks of the Flint River, in Madison County, where he lived until his death and where he is buried.—Mrs. P. H. Mell in Transactions of the Alabama Historical Society, vol. iv, pp. 566-

567. Married: Miss Jennings, of Lexington, Oglethorpe County, Ga. It is believed that she was related to Miles Jennings, a noted Indian fighter, of the same county. Children: among others, Matthew who m. Nancy J. McCartney, and they were the parents of Thomas J. Taylor (q. v.). Last residence: Madison County.

TAYLOR, GEORGE, member of the constitutional convention of 1861, from Coosa County.

TAYLOR, GEORGE WASHINGTON, lawyer, member of congress, State legislature, circuit solicitor, was born on his father's plantation in Montgomery County; son of Edward Fisher and Anne Sewell (Trezevant) Taylor, both natives of Columbia, S. C., the former a graduate of the South Carolina college, a graduate in the law, but not a practitioner, removed to Alabama, and settled on a plantation in Montgomery County, entered the Confederate Army in 1861 and died in 1862, holding the rank of corporal in Semple's battery after the first Tennessee and Kentucky campaigns; grandson of Thomas and Mary (Taylor) Taylor of Columbia, S. C., and Shreveport, La., and of Dr. Samuel Haywood and Anne (Sewell) Trezevant, also of Columbia, prior to their settlement in Montgomery County; great-grandson of Thomas Taylor and of James Taylor, brothers, whose children, Thomas and Mary, married each other. Mr. Taylor received his preparatory education in the best private schools of Montgomery and Columbia, S. C., and graduated from the South Carolina college, Columbia, in 1867. He taught school at Mobile while reading law under Hon. Harry T. Toulmin, and was admitted to the bar, November, 1871. He entered upon the practice in Choctaw County and afterwards in Marengo County, and the territory in that judicial circuit. He was elected to the Alabama legislature from Choctaw County for the session of 1878-79; was elected State solicitor for the first judicial circuit, November 1880, served six years and was re-elected; elected to congress from the first district, November, 1896, and was successfully re-elected for nine terms, making a total of eighteen years in the position. He served three terms on the committee on appropriation and was transferred to the rivers and harbors committee, in order to more specifically serve his constituents. He wrote the first primary election regulations in the Democratic party organization adopted in Alabama for party government in Choctaw County. He entered the Confederate Army, November 1864, as a member of the South Carolina state troops, while a fifteen year old school boy, and served on the coast near Savannah and then enlisted as a private in Co. D., 1st South Carolina cavalry regiment and served as a courier for Gen. George P. Harrison until the close of the war. He is a Democrat and was chairman of the Choctaw County executive committee for several years; chairman of the State Democratic convention which called the constitutional convention in 1901. He is an Episcopalian; Mason; S. W. & J. W.; Knight of Pythias; Elk. Married: January 13, 1881, at Montgomery, Margaretta V. T., daughter of Eliphaleb Henry and Mary Jones (Bonner) Metcalf of that place. On her paternal line Mrs. Taylor is of English-Puritan ancestry who arrived in Massachusetts about 1635. On her mother's side she is of Dutch stock, which arrived in New York in 1626. Other colonial ancestors settled in Virginia, North Carolina and Georgia. She is a member of the Colonial Dames, the U. D. C.'s and entitled to membership in Americans of Royal Descent through the Green branch of her mother's family. Children: 1. Mary, m. Hughs Turnley Reynolds, Rome, Ga.; 2. Maggie Metcalf; 3. Edward; 4. Lucie Crommelin, m. W. B. Morton, New York, N. Y.; 5. Anne Trezevant; 6. Sadie Lyon; 7. George Margaretta. Residence: Demopolis.

TAYLOR, HANNIS, lawyer, diplomat and author, was born September 12, 1851, in Newbern, N. C.; son of Richard Nixon and Susan (Stevenson) Taylor, descendants of two colonial families that settled in North Carolina prior to the Revolutionary War, the former a merchant by occupation; brother of Richard V. Taylor (q. v.); grandson of William and Mary (Hannis) Taylor and of James C. and Elizabeth (Sears) Stevenson, also of North Carolina, a merchant and ship owner. The American founder of the family was William Taylor, a native of Scotland, who with his brother Isaac, settled in North Carolina. Dr. Taylor was prepared for college at Lovejoy's school for boys, Raleigh, N. C., and in a school taught by Dr. Wilson of Almanance County, N. C. In 1867 he entered the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, as a freshman, but owing to financial reverses his father was compelled to discontinue his college education. At seventeen years of age he began the study of law in the office of John N. Washington, Newbern, and in 1869 he removed with his father's family to Mobile, and continued the study of law in that city in the office of Anderson and Bond. On December 16, 1869, he was admitted to the bar, and in 1872 was admitted to practice in the supreme court of Alabama. In 1885 he was admitted to practice in the U. S. supreme court. His first professional position was that of solicitor for Baldwin County, which he held in spite of the fact that he resided in Mobile. Without college training and by private instruction in law, he has achieved a reputation throughout the world as one of the most eminent living authorities on constitutional history and constitutional law. Having gained a solid reputation at the bar and through his first published works, he was appointed minister to Spain by President Cleveland in 1893, which post he held until 1897. Among the celebrated cases in which he was counsel in his earlier practice was Watson vs. the city of Mobile, and the freedom of the press cases, both of which were argued before the U. S. supreme court. In 1892 he was appointed special counsel of the government of the United States before the Spanish treaty claims commission, and in April, 1903, was selected by the Secretary of State as counsel for the United States, before the Alaska boundary commission, Jacob M. Dickinson of Chicago and David T. Watson being his associates. He has been professor of constitutional and institutional law at Columbian, now George Washington university, since 1892. Before his present duties carried him from Alabama he was several times president of the Alabama bar association. He received the honorary degree of LL.D. from seven universities, including Dublin and Edinburgh. Author: "The Origin and growth of the English constitution"; "International public law"; "The science of jurisprudence"; "Jurisdiction and procedure of the supreme court of the United States"; "Cicero, a sketch of his life and works"; "The process of law." Dr. Taylor also brought to light the pamphlet published by Pelatiah Webster, February 16, 1783, at Philadelphia, in which it appears the paternity of the plan of our Federal Constitution was evolved by that author. At Dr. Taylor's instance this Webster pamphlet, containing the former's commentary, was reprinted May, 1908, after an interval of 116 years, as Senate document No. 461, sixteenth congress, first session. Married: May 8, 1878, in Mobile, to Leonora, daughter of William A. and Eliza LeBaron of that city. Children: 1. Charles LeBaron, m. Mary Hannon; 2. Mary Lillie, m. Dr. Reid Hunt, Boston, Mass.; 3. Hannis, jr.; 4. Hannah, m. Charles Clay Bayly, Washington, D. C.; 5. Richard. Residence: Washington, D. C.

TAYLOR, HUGH MCGEEHEE, civil engineer, railroad builder, U. S. transportation corps, and member of the French academy of science, was born March 6, 1870, in Montgomery; son of William and Mary (Hubbard) Taylor of Snowdown, Montgomery County; grandson of William and Ann Scott (McGehee) Taylor (q. v.), and of Samuel Dana and Frances (Russell) Hubbard (q. v.); great-grandson of Abner McGehee (q. v.). Both grandfathers and great-grandfather were pioneer settlers of Montgomery County. He was educated in the public schools of the county; was graduated from the Alabama polytechnic institute, with the degree of A. B. and C. E., 1888. He joined his brother, W. Dana Taylor, in Mexico, and studied railroad-building, the two constructing the Mexican national railway system, a work that engaged him for sixteen years. He succeeded his brother as superintendent of the Mexican national railroad, when W. Dana Taylor returned to the United States. When Huerta forced Americans out of Mexico, he went to Brazil to build railway lines; thence to Cuba to assist that government in railway organization. When America entered the World war, he offered his services to the U. S. government and was sent to Brest, France, in command of the 60th regiment U. S. infantry, assigned to transportation duty and was placed by Gen. Pershing in command of the 16th Grand division, transportation corps. He moved over 400,000 troops from Brest, via Paris, Tours, and Le Mans. He built railway lines, bridges and assembled transportation facilities, with such accuracy, speed and success that he was cited by Gen. Pershing for the efficiency of his work.

These services covered eighteen months. The French government presented him with a distinguished service medal, and in March, 1920, made him a member of the French academy of science. Gen. Pershing, in his citation, said: "Lt.-Col. H. McG. Taylor, T. C., for exceptionally meritorious service rendered as general superintendent of the 16th Grand Division. This railway grand division, under Col. Taylor's management, handled more than 400,000 troops during the months of March, April and May, without serious accident. Colonel Taylor's work has been distinguished for its technical perfection, and the actual strength which has actuated all his subordinates. His cordial co-operative strength has done much to make easier and more pleasant the natural difficulties of the Franco-American inter-allied transportation operations." He is a Democrat; and a Presbyterian. Married: in San Antonio, Texas, to Isadore Means, daughter of Rev. John Means, of that place, a cousin of the late Dr. Means, of Montgomery and nephew of the late Dr. Means of Emory college, Oxford, Ga. Children: 1. Isadore; 2. Margaret; 3. Alice. Residence: San Antonio, Southern Department, U. S. Engineers.

TAYLOR, JAMES ROBERT, road contractor, was born July 9, 1864, at Pinson, Jefferson County; son of James Andrew Jackson and Fanny (Lovett) Taylor, the former, who was a native of Jefferson County, and was a veteran of the War of Secession; grandson of Aaron and Phoebe Taylor, who lived in South Carolina, the former who was a native of Tennessee, and of Ellige B. Lovett; great-grandson of Thomas and Rhoda (Roberson) Lovett. He received only a common school education. He engaged in farming, mined mineral coal for some time, did grade work on the public roads, and at the general election of November, 1910, was elected road supervisor of Jefferson County. He is a Democrat, a member of the Methodist Episcopal church South, and an Odd Fellow. Married: October 4, 1896, at Pinson, to Ella Taylor Johnson, daughter of William Marian and Mary Jane (Bently) Johnson, who lived at Pinson; granddaughter of Mathew Johnson, who removed to Alabama from South Carolina about 1800, and of William Bently, a native of Calhoun County, and of Irish ancestry. Children: 1. Walter; 2. Pluma; 3. Mary Lou; 4. Thelma; 5. Robert Cunningham. Residence: Pinson.

TAYLOR, JOHN B., State superintendent of education, 1865.

TAYLOR, JOHN D., warehouseman, was born May 9, 1830, in Habersham County, Ga., son of Theophilus and Anna (Dykes) Taylor, natives respectively of South Carolina and Georgia, the former a hatter and a farmer, who was born in 1790, was a soldier in the War of 1812, came to Georgia when a boy and died there in 1853; grandson of Jerry and Lea (White) Taylor, both of English descent, the former a Virginian who fought in the Revolutionary War, moved to South Carolina when a young man, and later to Georgia, and of John Dykes. He was reared on a farm; received his early education at home; began clerking in Jackson County in 1850; studied law; went to Guntersville in 1855, and sold goods for some time; was admitted to the bar at Guntersville, 1857, and practiced law at that place for two years; was employed by a wholesale house in Nashville, Tenn., in 1860; enlisted in Co. E, Forty-eighth Alabama infantry regiment, C. S. Army, in March, 1862; was promoted to ordnance sergeant; returned home in December, 1864, and entered a clerkship in a store; entered the warehouse and commission business in 1871; erected a warehouse in Guntersville in 1885; served as justice of the peace and notary; was a Methodist Episcopalian and an Odd Fellow. Married: (1) June 4, 1861, to Mrs. Virginia Moore, who died August 9, 1869, daughter of William Patton, who came from Virginia, settled near Huntsville, and married a Miss Miller; (2) October 10, 1870, to Catherine Black, daughter of George and Margaret (Phinizee) Bell, of Jackson County, Va., the former of whom was a blacksmith and farmer. Children, by first marriage: 1. Warren P.; 2. Clarence M.; 3. Herbert Lee. Last residence: Guntersville.

TAYLOR, J. J., pioneer missionary Baptist preacher; pastor of Mobile and at Knoxville, Tenn.

TAYLOR, JOHN M., lawyer, member constitutional convention 1819, was born about 1788, in Orange County, Va., and died in 1859 or 1860 in Mississippi. He came from an excellent family and was well educated, practiced law for several years in Virginia, and came to Huntsville in 1817. For a short time he labored as a merchant there, but soon resumed his profession. He was a member of the constitutional convention of Alabama in 1819, and was one of the three sub-committeemen who drafted the first constitution of the state. Later he became a law partner of Judge Minor, whom he succeeded on the supreme court bench in 1825. After eight years' service on the supreme bench, he resigned, and a year or two later moved to Mississippi, where he practiced law until his death. Married: Miss Foote, a sister of Philip Foote, a merchant of Huntsville. Last residence: Mississippi.

TAYLOR, JOSEPH WALTERS, lawyer, was born July 12, 1820, in Burksville, Cumberland County, Ky. His parents were Virginians, his father a lawyer of prominence and his mother a Miss Stockton. He was graduated at Cumberland college, Kentucky, in 1838, and went to Alabama, where for two years he taught school in Greene County. He read law in the office of Judge Harry I. Thornton in Eutaw, was admitted to the bar, and practiced law for about twenty years. In 1844 he was on the Clay electoral ticket; represented Greene County in the State legislature in 1845; and was re-elected to the legislature in 1847. He was for several years the law partner of Col. Hale; was elected to the State senate from Greene and Marengo Counties over Hon. William E. TAYLOR, WILLIAM HENRY, planter, was born June 1, 1801, in Columbia, S. C., and died September 25, 1879, in Montgomery; son of Thomas and Mary (Taylor) Taylor II, both of the pioneer family of Taylors of South Carolina; grandson of Thomas and Ann (Wyche) Taylor I, of Columbia, the former a member of the Provincial congress of 1775, colonel of militia under Gen. Sumter in the Revolutionary Army, member of the first U. S. constitutional convention, member of the Jacksonboro assembly and the State legislature, also the donor to the State of the land upon which Columbia was first laid out; great-grandson of John Taylor of Virginia and South Carolina, and of Peter and Alice (Scott) Wyche of Virginia. He was trained by tutors and graduated from the South Carolina college in a class with members of the Rhett, Pinckney, Halls, Elmore and Bellinger families. He studied law, but never practiced the profession, devoting himself to extensive planting interests, having holdings in the Yazoo Valley, as well as South Carolina. About 1833 he removed to Montgomery County with a colony from Columbia, including the Taylor, Hall, Cheney, Bellinger, McGinney and Elmore families. As they journeyed overland they witnessed the "falling of the stars" which took place in 1833. He entered lands near Oak Grove, about fourteen miles from Montgomery, later removed to the city of Montgomery and built a home on the present McDonough street which is still standing. In addition to conducting his planting interests he engaged in the cotton business with William Knox, banker, and in 1869, through cotton speculation, lost his fortune. After this financial catastrophe he took charge of the Madison House, located at the corner of Dexter avenue and Perry street, and successfully conducted that hostelry. In 1873 he moved to Mobile to serve as assistant inspector of the port of Mobile, under his son-in-law, Maj. Albert Elmore (q. v.). He was a democrat; and a Methodist. He was also an ardent Secessionist, aiding that movement in every way; and three of his sons served in the C. S. Army. Married: in 1827, in Columbia, S. C., to Mary Elizabeth, daughter of Capt. Robert and Sarah (Bozler) Halls (q. v.). Children: 1. William Henry, jr., m. Elizabeth Powell; 2. Mary Jane, m. Maj. Albert Elmore (q. v.); 3. Sarah Maria, m. Col. John W. A. Sanford (q. v.); 4. Albert McGinney, deceased; 8. Albert James, a Confederate soldier, m. Annie Catherine Tighlman, both reside in Montgomery; 9. Elmore, m. Kate Redmond. Last residence: Montgomery.

TEAGUE, ELDRED BURDER, Baptist minister, was born January 20, 1820, in Newberry District, S. C., and died November 24, 1902, in Abertant, Tuscaloosa County; son of John Williams and Mary (Davis) Teague, the former a farmer who removed from South Carolina to Greene County in the spring of 1822, and in the fall of the same year to Shelby County; grandson of the Rev. James Teague, a Baptist minister. He received a very limited elementary education in the public schools of Shelby County, but by close application he acquired sufficient preparation to enter the University of Alabama in 1836, and in the main worked his way through college, graduating with second honor, December 16, 1840. Three years later he received the degree of A. M. The degree of D. D. was conferred upon him by Howard college in 1872. Immediately after graduation he began teaching in Montgomery County. During the six years devoted to this occupation he began preparing himself for the ministry. In 1844 he was ordained to the Baptist ministry and filled pastorates in Alabama for ten years after which he assumed charge of the Baptist church at LaGrange, Ga., and held that pastorate ten years. He was elected president of the East Alabama female college, Tuskegee, and remained in that position three years, during a part of which time he was pastor of the Baptist church of that town. Feeling the urge to return to the active ministry, he assumed the pastorate of the Baptist church at Selma, and remained there eight years. Later he served pastorates in middle Alabama and in East Lake. He was mainly instrumental in removing Howard college from Marion to Birmingham, and was for many years a trustee of that institution. He is reputed to have made the first secession speech in Georgia, and was made chairman of the relief committee after war began. He was with the Army of Tennessee from Chattanooga until Hood's expedition entered into that state. He was one of the founders of the "Alabama Baptist," and one of the editors of that organ. He was a frequent contributor to the religious press, and left a ms. memoir of five hundred pages covering the history of the Baptist denomination in Alabama, which is deposited in the archives of the Southern theological seminary, Louisville, Ky. He was a Democrat and a Mason. Married: (1) June 15, 1843, at Tuscaloosa, to Sophia Nelson, daughter of James G. Blount, captain in the Indian War, sheriff, member of the legislature of Alabama from Tuscaloosa County; (2) June, 1861, at Tuskegee, to Louise Emeline, daughter of William H. Philpot, a planter. TENNILLE, ALEXANDER ST. CLAIR, physician and manufacturer, was born September 16, 1838, at Needwood, Washington County, Ga., and died July 4, 1907, in Montgomery; son of Major Algernon Sidney and Louisa Dunbar (Roe) Tennille, the former born at Tennille, Washington County, Ga., later lived at Fort Gaines, Ga., then at Randolph County, now Clay, and in 1864 moved to Jackson County, Fla., organizer of the "Silver Greys," a company of old men who volunteered for home defense during the War of Secession; grandson of Lt.-Colonel Francis and Mary Bacon (Dixon) Tennille, for whom the town of Tennille was named, and of Alexander I. and Tryphena Dunbar (Morel) Roe, of Savannah, Ga.; great-great-grandson of the Honorable Thomas Dunbar, member of the English parliament from Liverpool, and of Capt. George Lyddell Bacon; great-great-great-grandson of John Nathaniel Bacon, who was the son of Gen. Nathaniel Bacon, a native of Suffolk, England, later of Bacon's Rebellion, a thrilling chapter in early American history and whose father was Thomas Bacon of Tristram Hall, cousin of Lord Bacon, his mother, Elizabeth, daughter of Sir Robert Brooke. The Tennilles emigrated from Picardy, France, to the Isle of Man or to Ireland following the Edict of Nantes, and settled in America. Lt.-Col. Francis Tennille, founder of the Georgia branch, was born in Prince William County, Va., and removed to Georgia during the colonial period, being a lieutenant in the 2nd battalion, Georgia brigade, Continental line. He was voted a grant of land, with other officers, by the Georgia house of assembly, "in recognition of their services, in that they voluntarily did duty in common with the privates of the militia under Col. Elijah Clark." After the Revolutionary War, Lt. Tennille received from the general government a commission as captain in recognition of his services in the Continental Army. He was a Mason and member of the Society of the Cincinnati in Georgia. Pierre Morel, a native of Zurich, Switzerland, emigrated to America about 1732, bringing his family and two white servants and settled in South Carolina, later removing to Savannah, Ga. His grandson, John Morel, was a member of the committee of safety, 1775. His son, John Morel, was a captain in the Revolutionary War and afterwards held political office in Georgia. Dr. Tennille received his education at the University of Nashville, graduated in medicine at that institution, February 13, 1861; entered the War of Secession immediately, as physician and surgeon in the C. S. Army; served one year with the Co. D, 9th Georgia infantry regiment; was appointed commissary to the regiment and later was a member of General Field's staff. The close of the war found him in Marianna, Fla., where he practiced his profession, later locating in Troy. In the latter town he was councilman, later mayor, and while serving in that office, 1886, caused to be established the first waterworks system there. In 1888 he discontinued the practice of medicine and built the Troy fertilizer factory, a pioneer industry at that point. He was the originator of the plan to build the Alabama Midland Railroad and was its first vice-president. He removed to Montgomery where he built a large cotton seed oil mill. Married: June 20, 1872, at Greenwood, Fla., to Sarah, daughter of William and Sarah (Folsom) Butler, who lived at Marianna, the former a native of Fayetteville, N. THOMAS, FREDERICK W., professor of English literature, University of Alabama, 1847-48.

THOMAS, GEORGE, planter and member Alabama legislature, was born February 27, 1797, on a plantation in Richmond County, N. C., and died March 16, 1867, at Lowndesboro, Lowndes County; son of William and Sarah (Tarburton) Thomas, the former a native of Anson County, N. C., who removed to Richmond County where he settled on the Pee Dee River, known as "Silverheeled Billy," because of a bullet of silver which was extracted from his foot after a fight with the British, devoted himself largely to agriculture and the public welfare of his native state after the Revolutionary War, was elected to the lower branch of the legislature of North Carolina 1810-16-19-20, and to the State senate, 1821, a prosperous planter and left his heirs a comfortable estate, his first wife, Mary Everett, bore him four children, Hannah, Rebecca, Mary and William, and his second wife, Sarah Tarburton, was also the mother of four, John, James, George, and Rachel; grandson of William and Rachel (Roe)

Thomas, of Virginia, who later settled in Anson County, N. C., the former not only a planter, but also a man of public affairs, was placed on the committee of safety at Wadesboro, N. C., 1775, the duty of which was to apprehend, arrest and bring to trial the Tories of the section, a member of the first and second Colonial congress of North Carolina, which met at Newbern and Hillsboro, respectively, 1774-75, and after the Declaration of Independence one of two men elected to the Colonial congress, also a Revolutionary soldier, of a scientific turn of mind, and the father of ten children, several of whom fought in the Revolutionary War; great-grandson of Stephen Thomas, who was also a native of Virginia, but later a resident of Anson County, N. C. Mr. Thomas received a sound education in his native county, and accumulated a fine library, consisting in the main of scientific books. In 1819 he settled on a farm on the Pee Dee River, near Rockingham, N. C., where he remained until 1840, at which time he removed to Alabama and located on a cotton plantation near Montgomery which he purchased from Thomas Gilmer. Later he sold this tract, consisting of two thousand acres, and removed to Lowndes County, where he built a handsome residence at the county site, the first of a number of stately homes in that community. He was among the founders of the Lowndesboro institute, a school for girls established in 1852, which was quickly recognized as equal to any like school in the State. Before leaving North Carolina he had been a member of the legislature of that state, serving in the lower house during the terms of 1827-35-36; and in the State senate 1837-38. He was an ardent supporter of the Confederate cause and gave liberally of his means for the triumph of its principles. Being too old to actively participate in hostilities, he gave his only two living sons to the Confederate Army, one of whom was killed in battle. During the memorable Wilson's raid he suffered so many indignities at the hands of the Federal soldiers, that his health, already poor, became so much worse, that he became an incurable invalid. Had it not been for the protection and loyalty of his negro servants, these brutal invaders would certainly have shot him, old and feeble as he was. He was an old line Whig; a Methodist; and Mason. Married: July 6, 1819, in Marlborough District, S. C., to Mary, daughter of Shockley and Isabella (McRae) Adams of that place, the former born in 1781, died 1824, was the son of Jonathan Adams, a native of Virginia, whose wife was Mary Robeson of Robeson County, N. C. Jonathan Adams with his family moved to Marlborough District, S. C., about 1760, and was a valiant Revolutionary soldier, in Gen. Francis Marion's brigade, and died of wounds and hardships on his way home after the war had ended. His parents were natives of Pennsylvania and he was a direct descendant of Henry Adams, founder of the Adams family in America. This Henry Adams, a native of England, settled in Mt. Wallaston, Mass., now Quincy. Of his eight sons one returned to England, one remained at Mt. Wallaston, four settled in neighboring towns, two went to Pennsylvania and thence to Virginia.

The McRaes were of Highland Scott ancestry. Children: 1. William Adams, m. Susan Cook, Lowndes County; 2. Catherine Isabelle; 3. Sarah Jane; 4. Shockley; 5. George Washington, m. TORREY, CHARLES J., lawyer, register in chancery, and city attorney of Mobile, was born April 25, 1850, in Claiborne, Monroe County, and died July 14, 1917, at Mobile; son of Judge Rufus C. and Elizabeth Sargent (Henshaw) Torrey, natives of Massachusetts and Alabama respectively, the former a lawyer, who removed to Alabama in the thirties and resided in this State until his death in 1882; grandson of Andrew Henshaw, a native of Massachusetts, who came to Alabama after the War of 1812, in which he served as a soldier. The Torreys are of English descent. Mr. Torrey was educated in Leicester, Mass., and at Bellevue institute, near Lynchburg, Va. Prior to entering upon the study of law, in 1872, he devoted himself for two years to surveying. Reading law in his father's office at Claiborne, he was admitted to the bar in 1873, and began the practice in his native town. He was soon thereafter appointed register in chancery for Monroe County, which position carried him to Monroeville to reside, but he resigned a few years later and in 1879 removed to Mobile, where he became a member of the law firm of Pillans, Torrey and Hanaw. In 1889, he was elected city attorney of Mobile, holding that office for several terms. He was a Democrat, and an Episcopalian. Married: in January, 1887, to Helen, daughter of Judge Lyman Gibbons (q. v.). Last residence: Mobile.

TORREY, SAMUEL, merchant and real estate dealer, was born April 21, 1824, in Montreal, Canada, deceased; son of David S. and Nanny (Dudy) Torrey, natives of Vermont, who moved to Canada in 1820, and returned to Vermont in 1837, the former a soldier in the War of 1812; grandson of an American soldier in the Revolutionary War, who served under Ethan Allen. He attended French college, in Montreal, but after the return of his family to Vermont, finished his education in that state. He left Montpelier, Vt., in 1847, and went to Montgomery where he was in the clothing business until 1865. He fought in the C. S. Army at different periods during the War of Secession. "He went to Kowaliga, Alabama, in the fall of 1865, and merchandised and farmed there until August, 1871, when he came to Birmingham. On his arrival he bought a lot and let the contract to have a store put up, and returned in ten days with a wagon load of goods hauled all the way from Montgomery. This incident marks an interesting episode in Birmingham's history. This wagon load was the first merchandise ever brought to the city. Mr. Torrey was among the faithful few who remained in Birmingham throughout the cholera scourge, and from his store many things were supplied to the suffering. Drugs, as well as other articles, were kept in stock."—From "History of Jefferson County and Birmingham," 1887, p. 488. Mr. Torrey withdrew from the merchandising business in July, 1886, and became a dealer in real estate. He was a Methodist and an Odd Fellow. Married: (1) name unknown; (2) December 31, 1863, to Jane E. Westbrook, daughter of J. C. Westbrook, of Birmingham. Children: 1. John. Last residence: Birmingham.

TORRY, RUFUS C., member of the constitutional convention of 1875, from the twenty-ninth senatorial district; grand master grand council of Alabama, 1859; father of Charles J. Torrey, lawyer, Mobile.

TOULMIN, HARRY, minister, lawyer, judge, member of the constitutional convention of 1819, was born April 7, 1766, at Taunton, England, and died in December, 1824, at Washington Court House; son of Rev. Joshua Toulmin, who was an independent clergyman at Colyton, Devonshire, a Baptist clergyman, Taunton, England, 1765-1804, and a Unitarian clergyman, Birmingham, England, 1804-15. He received his education in England, and was licensed to preach, was a dissenting minister at Chorobert, Lancashire, until 1793, when he came to this country, accompanied by Dr. Joseph Priestly, landed at Norfolk, Va., and proceeded to Winchester, Va., Dr. Priestly settling in Pennsylvania. He established a seminary at Norfolk and the following year removed to Lexington, Ky., where he became president of the Transylvania university, for four years. He was suspected of Unitarian sentiments, and as he was also a friend of Thomas Jefferson, he won disfavor with the Presbyterian trustees, several of whom resigned and established an academy of their own known as the Kentucky academy. They, however, reunited with the seminary in 1798, and although Mr. Toulmin was re-elected unanimously to the presidency of the academy, he retired, April 4, 1796, and Rev. James Moore succeeded him. In 1796, he became secretary of the state of Kentucky, and removed to Frankfort, where he resided and continued in his office for eight years, during the two terms of Gov. James Garrard. He studied law, attained eminence at the Kentucky bar, and in 1804, was appointed by President Jefferson judge of the superior court of the Mississippi Territory, and subsequently became the first federal judge of what was then called the Tombigbee District. When he came to the territory, he first settled at Fort Stoddard in Washington County, two or three miles from the Mt. Vernon garrison. His first court was held in the fall of 1804, at a place named by him, New Wakefield. He was distributing postmaster for all mails arriving for the territory in his neighborhood, and served as minister and as physician. His judicial functions ceased, in 1819, when the Mississippi Territory was divided, and he subsequently removed to Washington Court House, where he was one of the framers of the State constitution. He is the author of: "Description of Kentucky," 1792; "Magistrate's Assistant; Collection of the Acts of Kentucky," 1802; "Review of the Criminal Law of Kentucky, with James Blair," 1804; "Mississippi Magistrate's Guide," and the "Laws of Mississippi," 1807; and "Digest of the Laws of the State of Alabama," 1823. He was a Democrat. Married: (1) in England, to Ann Tremlett; (2) in Washington County, to Martha Johnson, a native of England. Children, by first marriage: 1. Lucinda, m. Daniel Garrard, deceased; 2. Frances, m. Edmund Pendleton Gaines, major general in the U. S. Army, deceased; 3. Hannah, m. Major Reuben Chamberlain of the C. S. Army, deceased; 4. Theophilus Lindsey, m. Herndon, deceased; by second marriage: 9. Helen, m. William P. Gaines, deceased; 10. Harry, deceased, m. Frances Biddle Priestly, child Priestly, residence, Birmingham. Last residence: Washington Court House, Washington County.

TOULMIN, HARRY THEOPHILUS, lawyer, judge of the southern district of Alabama, was born March 4, 1838, in Mobile County, and died November 12, 1916, at Mobile; son of Theophilus Lindsey and Amante (Juzan) Toulmin (q. v.); grandson of Judge Harry Toulmin (q. v.).

He received his education at the University of Alabama and University of Virginia, and completed a partial course of law at the latter place. He attended one course of lectures in the law department of the University of Louisiana, was admitted to the bar, and in 1860, commenced the practice of his profession at Mobile. He entered the C. S. Army, April 23, 1861, as private in the Third Alabama infantry regiment; in September was promoted to the first lieutenancy of Co. H, Twenty-second Alabama infantry; and was later promoted to the captaincy of his company, which he commanded in the battles of Shiloh, Perrysville, Murfreesboro, and Chickamauga. During the progress of the last battle he was made major of his regiment; was promoted to the rank of lieutenant-colonel of his regiment, two months later; and in July, 1864, was made colonel, and served with this rank until the close of the war. He participated in the campaign of Dalton and Atlanta, and all subsequent battles of that part of the army to which he belonged, with the exception of Franklin and Nashville, Tenn., and surrendered with Gen. Johnston at Greensboro, N. C. He resumed his law practice at Mobile in 1865; was presidential elector in 1868; and in 1870, was elected to the State legislature, and served as chairman of the committee on judiciary, and as a member of the committee on corporations. During his term of service in the legislature he was admitted to practice before the supreme court of the state. He was elected judge of what was then the sixth judicial circuit of Alabama, in November, 1874, for a term of six years, and was re-elected in 1880, the circuit having been changed from the sixth to the first judicial circuit. He resigned the office in 1882, and resumed his law practice, but in December, 1886, was appointed by President Cleveland as U. S. judge for the southern district of Alabama. He was trustee of the Alabama medical college, and president of the board of trustees of the Mobile Y. M. C. A. He was a Democrat and senior warden of the Protestant Episcopal church. Last residence: Mobile.

TOULMIN, THEOPHILUS LINDSEY, planter, was born July 4, 1796, at Frankfort, Ky., and died July 4, 1866, at Mobile; son of Judge Harry and Ann (Tremlett) Toulmin (q. v.). He was educated at home by tutors and by his father, and in November, 1813, when he was seventeen years old, enlisted under Gen. Claiborne in Gen. Jackson's army, where he attained the rank of lieutenant. He became a planter and conducted a stock farm; represented Mobile in the State legislature in 1831; and was elected sheriff of Mobile County a year or two later. He served in the State legislature in both branches for a total of about twenty-five years, the greater part of the time in the senate. He was at one time brigadier general of the militia of the state, his military district extending over several of the south Alabama counties; and was assistant quartermaster in the volunteer army during the war with Mexico. He was appointed postmaster of Mobile in 1848.

by President Polk, was removed from that office by President Taylor, and re-instated by President Pierce. In 1840, he was on the Democratic electoral ticket, and was chairman of the electoral college when, in the senate chamber, they cast the vote of the state for Van Buren as president and R. M. Johnson as vice president. After his last term in the senate, which ended with the overthrow of the Confederacy, he withdrew from public life, and died the next year. He was a Democrat and a Protestant Episcopalian. Married: May 13, 1821, at Mobile, to Amante Elizabeth Juzan, daughter of Daniel and Louise (Laurendine) Juzan, of Mobile, who came from France during its ownership of Mobile. Some of her ancestors came to Mobile as early as 1735-1736, during Bienville's governorship, and participated in the Indian Wars of that period. Children: 1. Louisa A., m. Lloyd Bowers, both deceased; 2. Mary J., m. Edmund Pendleton Gaines (q. v.); 3. Frances H., Dayton, O., m. Morton Toulmin, deceased; 4. Edmund Pendleton, m. Fannie E. Bowers, both deceased; 5. TRAVIS, ALEXANDER, Missionary Baptist minister and planter, was born May 22, 1790, in Edgefield District, S. C., and died in 1852, in Evergreen; son of Barrett and Elizabeth (DeLoach) Travis, both natives of near Redbank church, Edgefield District, S. C. The Travis family dates its place in English history from Jules Travis who came to that country with William the Norman. The DeLoach family is of French origin although through intermarriage there was an Irish strain in Alexander Travis' maternal line. Not privileged to have a college education he was a man of well trained mind, being a close student of the Bible and of current events. In 1910 he was licensed to preach in the Primitive Baptist church and three years later was ordained to full work in the ministry. He assumed the pastorate of several churches in his community, but removed to Alabama in 1817, locating near Evergreen, Conecuh County, where he resided until his death. Being turned out of the Primitive Baptist church for preaching missionary doctrines he united with that branch of the church. Under his influence, during the year 1818, new converts were made and with those previously connected with the church a congregation was soon formed, Old Beulah church, located between Sparta and Brooklyn, founded by him. Owing to the sparseness of the population his pastoral duties were arduous, but with the zeal of the true apostle he disregarded fatigue and natural barriers, often walking thirty-five miles, carrying his saddle bags by hand and swimming swollen streams when necessary. During this pioneer period the only mode of light was the blazing pine torch, and after a day spent in labor cultivating his fields he would devote his evenings to the study of the scripture in preparation of his Sunday sermons. Through his indefatigable exertions, thriving churches were established in different parts of the county, over some of which he held the pastorate for thirty-five years. Married: Polly, daughter of Duke and Martha Williams, who lived near Redbank church, Edgefield County, S. C., a well to do family that stood high in the esteem of the community. Children: 1. John Duke, m. Mary, daughter of Nicholas and Polly Stallworth of Edgefield, S. C.; 2. Martha Ann, m. Nicholas Stallworth; 3. James Monroe, m. Mary Ann McCreary, Evergreen, parents of Philip Alexander Travis of Montgomery; 4. Philip Goode, twin brother of James Monroe, m. Adrairie Calloway, who moved to the western states. Last residence: Evergreen.

TRAVIS, JAMES C., register in chancery and tax commissioner. was born August 5, 1829, near Evergreen; son of Mark and Jemima (Stallworth) Travis (q. v.), and brother of Lieut.-Col. William Barrett Travis (q. v.), hero of the Alamo, and of Mark Butler Travis (q. v.). Mr. Travis received his education in his native county. He held the office of county surveyor some years and was subsequently made register in chancery and tax commissioner. He is a Baptist; a Democrat; and a Mason. Married: (1) in 1849, to Sophronia Davis, of Georgia; (2) to Mary E. Green, also of Georgia. Children, by the first wife: 1. Louise, deceased; 2. Mark A.; by the second wife, Jemima E. Residence: Evergreen.

TRAVIS, MARK, Sr., pioneer farmer, was born September 6, 1783, at Cambridge, Edgefield County, S. C., and died September 15, 1836, at Sparta; son of Barrett and Elizabeth (DeLoach) Travis, who was born near Ft. Ninety-Six, Edgefield County, and lived at Travis, S. C. He was among the early pioneer farmers in Alabama and at the time of his death had accumulated considerable substance, including his home and several hundred acres of land, well stocked, a dozen slaves and several hundred head of cattle. He was a Nullifier; and a Missionary Baptist. Married: January 1, 1808, near Redbank church, Edgefield District, S. C., to Jemima, daughter of William and Jemima (Tripp) Stallworth, the latter the daughter of Jemima (McNammarr) Tripp, a native of Ireland. Children: 1. William Barrett, (q. v.); 2. and 3. Jemima and a twin sister that died in infancy; 4. Sarah Ann, m. Frances M. Brantley; 5. Emily Katherin, m. Joseph V. Brantley of Conecuh County; 6. Nancy, m. Rufus H. Kilpatrick, Monroe County; 7. Alexander Randsen, died unmarried; 8. Mark Butler (q. v.); 9. Calloway, m. (1) Sophronia Davis, (2) Mary Elizabeth Green. Last residence: Sparta.

TRAVIS, MARK BUTLER, circuit clerk and soldier, was born May 18, 1827, in the neighborhood of Old Town; son of Mark and Jemima (Stallworth) Travis (q. v.). He had a good preparatory education; read medicine under Dr. John Watkins and while en route to a distant state to prosecute further study on this subject, though only seventeen years of age, he enlisted in the famous "Palmetto regiment," of South Carolina, on their way to join General Scott in Mexico. He participated in the battles of Contreras and Churubusco, being wounded in the head in the latter encounter and was consequently prevented from being with his regiment when it entered the Mexican capital, but participated in subsequent military activities in that war. On returning home he was elected colonel of militia, and was afterwards made general of militia, defeating Col. Brock Henderson of Butler for that post. He was later elected clerk of the circuit court, which he held for four successive terms. He promptly responded to the call to arms when the War of Secession seemed inevitable and enlisted in the "Conecuh guards," the first company that left the county, being elected 2nd lieutenant of the company, part of the 4th Alabama infantry regiment, and going with it to Virginia. He died of pneumonia while at home on leave, in 1864. Last residence: Conecuh County.

TRAVIS, WILLIAM BARRETT, hero of the Alamo, was born August 9, 1809, in Edgefield District, S. C., and was killed by Santa Anna's men at the massacre of Ft. Alamo, Tex., March 6, 1836; son of Mark and Jemima (Stallworth) Travis (q. v.); brother of Mark Butler Travis (q. v.) and James C. Travis (q. v.). Colonel Travis received a good education in the schools of Conecuh County, to which his parents removed in 1818. He read law under Hon. James Dellett, at Claiborne, and was admitted to the bar at Monroeville, but was lured to the west by the adventurous spirit of the period and the threatened conflict with Mexico. Gifted in leadership he was soon at the head of forces organized to combat the aggressions of the Mexican leader, Gen. Santa Anna, who purposed suppressing the movements of the Anglo-American "rebels" of Texas. When he marched upon San Antonio with four thousand Mexicans he found Col. Travis in command of the opposing forces which consisted of but one hundred and forty-five men. Determined to hold Ft. Alamo, Col. Travis refused to surrender, hoping for reenforcements. After a heroic defense the Americans were attacked and the brave defenders massacred. Col. Travis fell near his cannon early in the assault, but his courage and defiant messages to Santa Anna immortalized his name. In the State capitol at Austin, Tex., there is a monument commemorating this stirring episode in her frontier history. The inscription reads: "Thermopylae had its messenger of defeat; the Alamo had none." Married: the daughter of William Cats. Children: 1. Martha; 2. Mary; 3. Sarah; 4. Eliza; 5. William, who was a Confederate soldier. All dead, but descendants are living in Conecuh and Escambia counties and in Santa Rosa County, Fla. Last residence: San Antonio, Texas.

He later recruited a company known as the "Gilmer Greys" and went out as its captain. In the fall of 1862, he was promoted to major and in 1863, the infantry branch of Hilliard's Legion, to which he belonged, was re-organized with the 59th and 60th Alabama regiments and he was made lieutenant colonel of the latter. He was wounded at Drewry's Bluff, and on March 25, 1865, near Petersburg, Va., he was shot entirely through the left lung and left upon the battle field for dead. He fell into the hands of the enemy, where he remained to the close of the war. He resumed the practice of law in Montgomery upon his return from the field of honor, in partnership with his father-in-law, Gov. Thomas H. Watts, and the firm was continued until 1873. He practiced alone from that date until 1880, when he formed a partnership with Henry Clay Tompkins and his nephew, Alexander Troy. In 1885 A. T. London was admitted to the firm and in 1888, this partnership was dissolved and Colonel Troy retired from the practice. He was active in delivering Alabama from the bondage of reconstruction and was elected to the State senate from Montgomery County, 1878, and re-elected, 1882, holding that position until 1886. He was a charter member of the Alabama bar association, and in all that organization's efforts for bettering the laws he was active and zealous, and at the time of his death was president of the association. He was a successful business man and amassed a comfortable fortune. He was president of the Alabama fertilizer company, a director in the Elyton land company, and one of the most sympathetic promoters of the industrial and commercial interests of the city of Birmingham, during its early history. He was a Democrat, and while being nursed in a Federal hospital, was converted to the Roman Catholic faith. TURNIPSEED, DAVID COLUMBUS, Jr., physician, U. S. public health service, was born July 14, 1880, in Aberfoil, Bullock County; son of David Columbus and Orleania Elizabeth (Owen) Turnipseed (q. v.). He received his early education at a private school at Chunnen-nuggee Ridge, where he remained from his seventh year until 1896, when he entered the high school at Union Springs, completing the course in two years. In September, 1898, he entered the sophomore class of the Southern university, at Greensboro, from which he graduated four years later with the degree of M. A., winning the trustees medal for the best senior essay and being commencement orator of his graduating class. In 1901, he entered the medical department of Tulane university, New Orleans, La., where he graduated in 1904, and entered on the practice of his profession at Whitmire, S. C., going later to Union Springs, where he established a drug business and practiced medicine. He entered the U. S. public health service, by examination, 1910, and was assigned to duty in the Marine hospital, Baltimore. He later served as medical officer on the U. S. revenue cutter, "Perry," on that vessel's cruise in Alaskan waters in search of Japanese seal fishery poachers, and also to give medical inspection of island inhabitants in those waters, escaping with all on board, when the "Perry" went aground off St. Paul's Island, July 26, 1910. He was then assigned to duty as medical officer on the "Tahoma," and accompanied that vessel in a tour of Pacific Islands, the medical officer going aboard to inspect and give professional services to the inhabitants. He was ordered to duty in the Philippine Islands in 1911, and rendered valuable service there, his duties being varied and responsible, ranging from inspection of immigrants to vaccination of lepers. On November 26, 1912, he was assigned in command of the quarantine service at Iloilo, P. I. During the European War he served with distinction. Residence: U. S. War Department.

TURNLEY, MATTHEW J., lawyer and county judge, U. S. district attorney, was a native of East Tennessee. No record of his birth, or ancestry is available. He was a lawyer and in 1840 was elected judge of the county court of Cherokee; later held the position of United States attorney for the northern district of Alabama under President Buchanan. For many years he was a member of the Methodist Church. Last residence: Jacksonville.

TURPIN, JOHN HENRY, tax collector, was born December 28, 1837, at Manchester, Chesterfield County, Va.; son of George William and Malinda Bennett (Dickerson) Turpin, the former a native of Manchester, who later removed to Charlottesville, Va.; grandson of Henry and Elizabeth (Robertson) Turpin, and of Wiley and Mary (Carr) Dickerson, all of Virginia, the home of the latter couple being "Plain Dealing," Albemarle County; great-grandson of Henry Turpin who was a native of England, and of Norman ancestry. The Dickersons were of Irish lineage. Mr. Turpin was educated in Virginia and came to Newbern in 1856, engaging in the drug business. At the outbreak of the War of Secession he raised a company from Blount and Marshall Counties, which he practically equipped and of which he was made captain. This contingent later formed part of Co. B, 28th Alabama infantry regiment, C. S. Army. He distinguished himself at the battles of Munfordsville, Ky., and Murfreesboro, Tenn., having lost an arm at the latter place, as well as receiving other wounds. Being left in the hands of the enemy he was sent to Johnson's Island and kept prisoner until the close of the war. He continued his patriotic efforts to preserve the civilization of the section during the days of reconstruction. The John H. Turpin chapter, U. D. C., at Newbern, was named in his honor. He was tax collector for Hale County twenty-eight years. He was a Whig until that party was dissolved after which he became a Democrat; a Mason and a Presbyterian. TURPIN, LOUIS WASHINGTON, planter and member U. S. congress, was born February 22, 1848, at Charlottesville, Albemarle County, Va., and died December 10, 1903, at Greensboro; son of George William and Malinda Bennett (Dickerson) Turpin, and brother of John Henry Turpin (q. v.). Mr. Turpin was left an orphan at nine years of age and came to Perry County as a refugee during the War of Secession. He was educated at Summerfield. Upon obtaining his majority he located in Hale County where he passed the remainder of his life. While still a young man he was elected tax assessor of his county and held the office for seven years. He was a Democrat and chairman of the county executive committee of that party, and member of the district committee for many years. He was elected to congress from the 4th district in 1889 but unseated by the Republicans of the 51st congress. He was re-elected in 1890 from the same district, and two years later, when the State was re-districted he was nominated from the 9th district of which Birmingham was the metropolis and in the fall election received a larger vote than any member of his party for any office in the field. In 1894 he was defeated for the congressional nomination by Oscar W. Underwood, and retired from active politics although he continued to have a deep interest in the welfare of his party. He was a successful planter and owned and managed several fine prairie plantations. He was a Methodist; and a Mason. Married: July 28, 1870, at Newbern, to Sarah Archer, daughter of Archer Hunt and Sarah Freeman (Pierce) Christian of Greensboro. Children: 1. Annie, m. P. F. Whittlesey, Columbus, Ga.; 2. Mamie, m. He was reared on a farm, received a common school education, and applied himself to farming and teaching school for several years. In 1883, he became an insurance agent and real estate broker at Gadsden. He was appointed justice of the peace in 1883, resigned that position in 1884, and was appointed notary public. He is a Methodist Episcopalian, a Mason and a Knight of Pythias. Residence: Gadsden.

TURRENTINE, JOHN, merchant, was born May 15, 1811, at Hillsboro, N. C., and died December 12, 1891, at Athens; son of John and Nancy (Wilson) Turrentine, the former who entered the U. S. Army soon after the battle of New Orleans, and died in his fifth year of service, the latter who had moved from North Carolina to Lincoln County, Tenn., where she received the news of her husband's death, and in 1820, moved to Morgan County, where she died six years later. Through the influence of Gen. Houston, congress passed a bill granting a bounty to the heirs of John Turrentine in consideration of his services. Mr. Turrentine was reared on a farm and received such education as was possible in his limited circumstances. He was a salesman with a small stock of goods at Courtland, Lawrence County, until 1844, when he went to Athens. For nearly half a century he was a merchant at that place. He was justice of the peace for twelve years preceding the War of Secession, and for three or four years after the war was general administrator. He was opposed to secession, but when the state withdrew from the union, gave his support to the cause. He was a Mason and a Methodist Episcopalian. Married: in May, 1837, in Lawrence County, Elizabeth Stephens, who died in November, 1842; (2) to Amanda Melvina Frances Higgins, who died July 16, 1884. Children, by first marriage: 1. John J. TUTWILER, EDWARD MAGRUDER, engineer, manufacturer and promoter, was born October 13, 1846, at Palmyra, Fluvanna County, Va.; son of Thomas Harrison and Harriet Magruder (Strange) Tutwiler, who lived at Palmyra, Va., the former a native of Seven Islands, Fluvanna County, Va., a graduate of the law school of the University of Virginia, a representative in the legislature of Virginia, 1858-1860, a captain in the quartermaster department of the U. S. Army, and commonwealth attorney for Fluvanna County for twenty years; grandson of Martin and Maria (Shores) Tutwiler, who lived at Seven Islands, Fluvanna County, Va., the former who was a sergeant in the War of 1812, and was brother of Dr. Henry Tutwiler (q. v.), and of Col. Gideon A. and Harriet (Magruder) Strange, who lived at Oak Hill, Fluvanna County, Va.; great-grandson of Henry Tutwiler, who was postmaster of Harrisonburg, Va., 1809-1841, of John Bowie Magruder, who sold his property in Maryland about the beginning of the nineteenth century, and went to live on a large estate in Fluvanna County, and of Mr. Shore, a soldier in the Revolutionary Army. The Tutwiler ancestors came to Pennsylvania from Switzerland after the Thirty Years War, and emigrated from Pennsylvania to Harrisonburg, Va. The Magruder or McGregors came from Scotland to Maryland about 1651, and the Stranges came from Scotland to Virginia about 1635.

Mr. Tutwiler was educated in private schools at Palmyra, Va., and at the Virginia military institute, at Lexington, Va., graduating, C. E., 1867. During his attendance at the institute, he was with the cadets under Breckinridge at the battle of Newmarket, May 15, 1864, and was also in the engagement at Lynchburg, where he served in the field with the corps until the end of the War of Secession. After his graduation, he taught school in Cecil County, Md., 1867-1869, and became assistant engineer with the Lehigh & Susquehanna Railroad Company, at Mauch Chunk, Pa., in 1870. He was resident engineer on the Chesapeake & Ohio Railroad, in Virginia and West Virginia, 1871-1874; assistant engineer on the Southern Railway in Kentucky, 1875-1877; chief engineer on the Miami Valley Railroad in Ohio, 1878-1879; assistant city engineer, Cincinnati, O., 1880; division engineer on the Richmond & Allegheny Railroad, Virginia, 1881; assistant chief engineer, Georgia Pacific Railway, Georgia, Alabama and Mississippi, 1882-1883; superintendent of mines, Coalburg Coal & Coke Company, 1883-1884; general superintendent of mines, Sloss Steel & Iron Company, 1885-1889; president, Tutwiler Coal, Coke & Iron Company, 1892-1906; director in First National Bank of Birmingham since 1894; director in Alabama Grocery Company, and Tutwiler Hotel Company, Birmingham. He is a Democrat; a junior warden in the Episcopal Church of Advent, Birmingham; and is president of the Country Club, Birmingham.

Married: (1) April 11, 1876, at Crittenden, Ky., to Mary Jeffray, who died 1885, daughter of Dr. Thomas R. W. and Mary E. Jeffray, who lived at that place; (2) July 11, 1887, at "The Island," Albemarle County, Va., to Margaret Chewning, daughter of John W. and Mary E. Chewning, who lived at that place. Army, Spanish-American War, superintendent of the furnaces of an iron and steel company in Sakchi, India, m. Florence Wilhoite; 2. Edward Magruder, jr., served as private in Co. G, First Alabama volunteer infantry, U. S. Army, Spanish-American War, general manager of Alabama State Land Company, Birmingham, m. Mary Anderson; 3. Herbert, coal, coke and iron broker, Birmingham, m. Mary Addison. Residence: Birmingham.

TUTWILER, HENRY, educator, was born November 16, 1807, at Harrisburg, Rockingham County, Va., and died September 21, 1884, at Green Springs, Hale County; son of Henry and Margaret (Lorchbaugh) Tutwiler. His ancestors are supposed to have come from the German sector of Switzerland and located in Pennsylvania, in the latter part of the 18th century, later removing to the valley of Virginia where they homesteaded land. Dr. Tutwiler was in part self taught in early youth and was prepared for college by Dr. Daniel Baker of Virginia, a famous Presbyterian minister and teacher. In 1825 he entered the University of Virginia, being one of the first enrolled students, graduating in 1829, the first student of that institution to receive the A. M. degree. He entered the law school and taught at Charlottesville for two years. Upon the establishment of the University of Alabama in 1831, he was chosen professor of ancient languages and served in that position until 1837. He filled the chair of mathematics in Marion college from the latter date until 1839 at which time he went to LaGrange college, in North Alabama, as professor of mathematics and chemistry. It was in 1847 that he established his celebrated private school for young men at Green Springs, now Hale County, remaining there until the close of the school, two years before his death. Dr. Tutwiler was far in advance of his generation in educational reform. When corporal punishment, often brutal in its character, was the rule everywhere, he forbade it in the famous school which he founded. When languages were taught by the most formal and antiquated methods, he used natural and living methods. He taught science by experiment when textbook teaching was the rule. He made the foundation of character the chief end of education, each pupil being treated as an individual, protesting against the Procrustean bed to which each student must be fitted whatever his natural endowments. His influence on general education was as great as his influence on his particular pupils, and the men trained by him showed the impress of his strong, earnest, sincere nature. Their love and reverence for him were boundless. The degree of LL. D. was conferred upon him by the Centenary college, La., and by the University of Mississippi in 1868. Rev. R. H. Rivers, in his life of Bishop Paine, says of Dr. Tutwiler: "He was a profound and rich linguist, a thorough mathematician, and a superior chemist. He was learned without pedantry, pious without bigotry, a gentleman without a blemish, a character without a flaw." He was appointed by President Pierce in 1853 in the board of examiners for West Point. In 1882, fifty-three years after his graduation, he delivered the alumni address at the University of Virginia. On the evening of May 12, 1866, he discovered the "New Star," which discovery he at once communicated to Prof. Joseph Henry of the Smithsonian institution, Prof. Stephen Alexander of Princeton, and other northern astronomers. He wrote short articles on current political matters for leading papers, which were either unsigned or published as editorials, thus influencing public opinion, but remaining with characteristic modesty in the background. Married: December 24, 1835, in Tuscaloosa, to Julia, daughter of Paoli Pascal and Elizabeth (Strudwick) Ashe, members of the well known Shepperd, Strudwick and Ashe families of North Carolina. Children: 1. Margaret, m. Maj. J. W. T. Wright, both deceased; 2. Anne Eliza, m. Dr. Elisha Young, both deceased; 3. Julia Strudwick (q. v.); 4. Catherine, m. Charles Nicholas Meriwether, Trenton, Ky.; 5. Henry, jr., m. Mrs. Mattie Cox, Texas; 6. Pascal Ashe, m. Rosalie Young, Greensboro; 7. Nettie, m. Col. T. C. McCorvey (q. v.); 8. Peyton, m. Leonard Pitts, Las Cruces, New Mexico; 9. Ida, m. Joseph Hill Hall, Macon, Ga.; 10. Carlos Smith, m. Janie Brewer, Dothan; 11. Gesner Harrison, m. Paoli Ashe Smith, Columbus, Miss. Last residence: Green Springs.

TUTWILER, JULIA STRUDWICK, educator, prison reformer, author, was born in Tuscaloosa, and died March 24, 1916, in Birmingham; daughter of Dr. Henry and Julia (Ashe) Tutwiler (q. v.). She received her college preparatory training from her father, and later entered a French boarding school of high repute in Philadelphia, Pa. She spent some time at Vassar college both as student and teacher of German and French; was for three years a student in Germany, one year of which was spent with the deaconesses of Kaiserwerth. Later she studied in Paris. With an insatiable thirst for knowledge, and an aptitude for languages, she spent a year in Lexington, Va., where she renewed her study of Greek and Latin from the professors of Washington-Lee university. She taught at the Tuscaloosa female college, at Greensboro, and with her father at his academy at Green Springs. Upon the death of her brother-in-law, Prof. J. T. W. Wright, she was elected his successor as president of the State normal school, at Livingston, and brought the education of girls up to the highest standard attained to that time. Through her efforts the University became a co-educational institution and young women trained by her were the first to make the test, successfully winning scholastic honors in competition with the male students. In recognition of her services for the higher education of the woman-hood of the State the first dormitory built for young women on the University campus was named in her honor. Miss Tutwiler's sympathies were stirred by the conditions under which the convicts of the State labored through the lease system, and she aroused public sentiment in behalf of reforms that greatly ameliorated conditions. It was her custom to give religious instruction to the prisoners, whether in jails or under sentence in camp or mines, and such was the gratitude felt for her services on the part of the convicts that she became known as the "angel of the prisons." In 1878, she was chosen to represent the Boston "Journal of Education," at the Paris exposition, and in 1891, papers on educational topics were read by her at the national convention of the Educational Association, and at the International association, Toronto, Canada, that same year. She was a guest of management of the woman's building, World's fair, Chicago, 1893, and was a member of the Congress of representative women of the world, at that time and place and read a paper before the assembly on corrections and charities. She was secretary for Alabama of the International congress of charities and corrections and one of the vice-presidents of the International congress of education. She was appointed to represent Alabama at the casting of the new liberty bell. She was also one of the judges of the department of liberal arts of the World's fair, in 1893. Author: articles, poems and short stories written by her, appeared, throughout her life, in American and English magazines and papers. Among her poems adopted to music were: "Alabama," used as the State song, "Dixie Now," "The Southern yankee-doodle," and "Duty," used for the Lee centennial. Unmarried. Last residence: Livingston.

TYLER, RICHARD THOMAS, Methodist minister, was born March 10, —, in Barnford, Jefferson County; son of Richard Lawson and Mary Ann (Patton) Tyler, the former a native of Helena, Shelby County, was a mechanic by trade, lieutenant in the Confederate Army and after the close of the war was a farmer and worked at his trade, about 1865 moved to Jefferson County, settled on Shades Mountain, in 1900 removed to Birmingham, father of eleven children, all living in Jefferson County; grandson of Rev. Bob Patton, of Brampton. Older members of the family settled in Georgia in the early part of the nineteenth century and removed to West Point in 1840 from which place they migrated to Shelby County. Rev. Mr. Tyler received his early education in the rural schools of Jefferson County and later attended the Zelasophian academy. He obtained collegiate education in the Southern university, Greensboro, graduating in June, 1902, with the degree of A. B. In November, 1896, at Tuscaloosa, he joined the North Alabama conference of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, at Tuscaloosa and has been continuously in ministerial work. He has filled many pastorates and was presiding elder of the Gadsden district four years and in 1913 was pastor of the congregation at Wesley chapel, Birmingham. He is a Mason; an Odd Fellow; and a member of Kappa Alpha college fraternity. Married: in October, 1905, in Huntsville, to Johnnie Theodora, daughter of John W. and Elizabeth Garner, who lived in that place, the former was tax assessor of Madison County, 1901-09. Children: 1. Richard, deceased; 2. Beth. Residence: Birmingham.

TYLER, ROBERT, lawyer, journalist, was born September 9, 1816, in Charles City County, Va., and died December 3, 1877, in Montgomery; son of John and Letitia (Christian) Tyler, the former of whom was tenth president of the United States; grandson of John and Mary (Armstead) Tyler, who lived at Greenway, Charles City County, Va., where their son was born, and of Judge Robert C. Christian, of Richmond, Va. He was educated at William and Mary College, Williamsburg, Va., where he was graduated, A. B., and read law in the office of Prof. Beverly Tucker. He practiced law in Williamsburg, Va., and in 1845, during the presidency of his father, moved to Philadelphia, where he acted as signer of patents, and for a time was private secretary to his father. He soon became prominent at the bar there, and after the expiration of his father's administration, he resided in Philadelphia and exerted an important influence in politics. He contributed greatly to the nominations of Franklin Pierce and James Buchanan, and received the tender of important missions from both. In 1847, he was solicitor of the sheriff of Philadelphia, and shortly after was appointed prothonotary of the supreme court of Pennsylvania. In 1858 was chairman of the Democratic executive committee in Pennsylvania. When the War of Secession began, he expressed his sympathy for the Southern states, and on Virginia's withdrawal from the Union, went south to give his aid to his native state. He enlisted as a private in Col. Custis Lee's brigade, and resigned shortly afterward when appointed register of the treasury, C. S. A. At the end of the war, he went to Alabama, and opened a law office in Montgomery. He became editor in chief of the Montgomery "Advertiser" in 1867, and started the "White Man's Issue," which waged a strenuous fight against the carpetbaggers and scallawags. His appointment as editor in chief of the "Advertiser" was due to the activities of a party of prominent politicians of Montgomery, and was made with the understanding that Mr. Tyler was to have complete control of the policy of that newspaper. He continuously exercised that control until he left the paper in 1873 or 1874. He was chairman of the Democratic state central committee of Alabama in the seventies; was an Episcopalian; and a Master Mason. When a very young man, he wrote two poems, "Ahasuerus," 1842, and "Death, or Medora's Dream," 1843, which were published in separate volumes by Harper Brothers, New York. He took great interest in the cause of Ireland during the period of the national repeal convention, was president of the Irish Repeal Association, and corresponded with Daniel O'Connell, Thomas Francis Meagher, and other prominent Irishmen in this country and abroad. He made many speeches for the cause and collected funds to aid it.

Married: September 12, 1839, at Bristol, Pa., to Elizabeth Priscilla Cooper, daughter of Thomas Abthorpe and Mary (Fairlie) Cooper, the former the Irish tragedian, cousin and ward of the English philosopher Godwin, who came to America in the early part of the nineteenth century, and was the reigning idol of the stage for a quarter century, and whose father was a north of Ireland Protestant, who lived in Dublin and was employed as ship's surgeon in the East Indies commercial service of England; granddaughter of James Fairlie, a captain in the Revolutionary Army, ranking as major on the staff of Gen. Von Steuben, was one of the first secretaries of the Society of Cincinnati, and was noted for his wit, being mentioned in Irving's "Life of Washington" as one of the few who could make Washington laugh, and whose father was captain of an English merchantman that traded between England and the West Indies; great-granddaughter of Robert Yates, of the Yates family of Schenectady, N. Y., who was chief justice of the supreme court of the state of New York, and was a delegate to the constitutional convention at Philadelphia in 1789, from which assembly he with Gov. Lansing resigned at the time the convention was about to adjourn, being unwilling to sign the constitution. Children: 1. Mary Fairlie, d. in infancy; 2. Letitia Christian, Montgomery; 3. John, d. in infancy; 4. Grace, deceased, m. John B. Scott, Mt. Meigs; 5. Thomas Cooper, d. in infancy; 6. Priscilla Cooper, m. Albert Taylor Goodwyn (q. v.), Robinson Springs; 7. Elizabeth, Montgomery, m. Thomas Gardner Foster (q. v.); 8. Julia Campbell, deceased, m. Harry Hewlings Tyson, Glenelg House, Maryland; 9. Robert, unmarried, newspaper writer, Montgomery. Last residence: Montgomery.

TYLER, ROBERT ENOCH, Methodist minister, was born December 29, 1869, on Shades Mountain, near Birmingham; son of Richard Lawson and Mary Ann (Patton) Tyler, the former served four years in the Confederate Army, and was slightly wounded; grandson of Enoch and Martha (Doss) Tyler, his second wife, who came from Virginia to Georgia, thence to Alabama, living first on the Coosa River, and of Robert Berry and Eliza Matilda (Payne) Patton, his second wife, being Anna Eliza Click, lived at Patton's Chapel near Birmingham. Rev. Mr. Tyler received his early education at Old Pleasant Hill academy, and his collegiate education at the Southern university, Greensboro, 1891-93, graduating in June of the latter year, with the degree of Ph.D. In 1895-96 he had professional training in Vanderbilt university. He taught, 1897, in the public schools at Wylam, Jefferson County, and in 1898 joined the North Alabama conference of the Methodist Episcopal church, South. He has had pastorates at Albertville, Cullman, Bridgeport, and Scottsboro; was for about five years a missionary in Mexico; spent about four years in Birmingham, three at Norwood church, and in 1913 was pastor of East Lake church. He is a Democrat; a Mason; and a Knight of Pythias. Author: "Mexico, past, present and future," 1912; "Human trinity and triangle," 1913; "Man, woman and child," 1913; "Tollers and their tools." Married: December 24, 1895, to Beulah Cook, daughter of Joseph Jones and Annie (Cook) Edmondson, who lived at Steele. Children: 1. Nellie Odette; 2. Corless Feagin, deceased; 3. Richard; 4. Beulah Norwood. Residence: Birmingham.

TYRRELL, WILLIAM JOSEPH, Roman Catholic priest, a resident of Alabama for several years, was born March 8, 1854, at Clonmore, Kings County, Ireland. He received his early education in the Marist and Carmelite schools, of Dublin, Ireland; entered the Society of Jesus, 1873, at Clermont, Auvergne, France, remaining at this place for three years; came to America, October, 1876, spending a year at St. Charles college, Grand Coteau, La.; was appointed teacher and prefect, 1877, at Spring Hill college; afterwards took up the studies of philosophy and theology at Woodstock college, Md., Miltown Park, near Dublin, Ireland, and Ona, Spain. He again returned to America, was assigned to Spring Hill college and appointed vice-president, 1891, served in this capacity for two years and then removed to Tampa, Fla. In 1899 he was appointed president of Spring Hill college. Under his able administration, 1899-1901, the college grew rapidly and many improvements were made. He is at present at Tampa, Fla. Residence: Tampa, Fla.

TYSON, ANNIE ARRINGTON, writer, was born October 28, 1878, at Lowndesboro, Lowndes County; daughter of Archibald Pitt and Ellen Nicholson (Arrington) Tyson (q. v.). She was educated in private schools in Montgomery, and graduated at the Alabama central female college, Tuskegee; attended Mrs. Clark's boarding school in Nashville, Tenn.; the Peebles-Thompson school, and Mrs. Green's boarding school, Riverside Drive, New York City. Later she studied music in New York, where she spent two winters. Author: "Dramana," 1903; "Magdalene and other poems," 1912; "You little match maker," Photoplay journal, beginning in November, 1919; "The price of honor," a novel, 1920; a manuscript, "My lady of the almond blossoms," was burned in an express office and never published. She is a member of the Magazine Club, but has no church membership. Residence: Montgomery.

TYSON, ARCHIBALD PITT, planter and business man, was born December 18, 1844, in Lowndesboro, Lowndes County; son of Archibald and Sarah Jane (Warren) Tyson, the former a native of Pitt County, N. C., who, when a young man moved to Ft. Deposit, Lowndes County, where he became a planter and capitalist, equipped a company for the Confederate Army, which was named for him, the "Arch Tyson Regulars"; grandson of Shem and Lucretia (Adams) Tyson, the former of Pitt County, N. C., and Laban and Parthenia (Jones) Warren, of Lowndes County; great-grandson of Noah Tyson, a member of the committee on safety in North Carolina during the American Revolution. The original stock of both the Tyson and Warren families is English. Mr. Tyson received his early education in his native county and in private schools in Butler County. He was a student at the University of Alabama, 1861-63, and joined the "Tuscaloosa Cadets," the company of college boys that joined Gen. N. B. Forrest at Corinth, Miss., and remained with him until the close of the war. He was in all battles and skirmishes in which his command participated. After the close of hostilities he engaged in farming in Lowndes County. In 1877 he removed to Montgomery and engaged in the real estate and loan business, which he still conducts. He is a Democrat, but is "independent" in local affairs. He has no church affiliations, being a "liberal" in his religious opinions. Married: November 25, 1875, at Montgomery, to Ellen Nicholson, daughter of Samuel Lewis and Eliza (Nicholson) Arrington (q. v.) of that place; descended from Joseph Wright

Nicholson, colonel in the Revolutionary War, and who fought valiantly at the battle of Guilford Court House, N. C. Children: 1. Annie Arrington (q. v.); 2. Sallie Nicholson, m. Olive Connor Maner (q. v.); 3. Archibald Pitt, jr., real estate, Montgomery; 4. Laura May, m. Robert Harris, formerly of Reidsville, N. C., now residing in Montgomery. Residence: Montgomery.

TYSON, JOHN RUSSELL, lawyer, farmer and chief justice Alabama supreme court, was born November 28, 1856, in Lowndes County; son of John Adams and Martha Matilda (Warren) Tyson, and brother of Archibald Pitt Tyson (q. v.). Judge Tyson was educated in the county schools; attended Harvard college, 1877, where he took the degree of A. B.; entered Washington and Lee university, and in 1879 graduated LL. B. He at once entered the profession of the law at Hayneville. In 1880 he was elected representative from Lowndes County in the general assembly. He changed his residence to Montgomery, continuing the practice there as a member of the firm of Lomax & Tyson. In 1889-92, he was president of the city council of Montgomery; from 1892-98 he was judge of the second judicial circuit; in the latter year he was elected associate justice; and in the Democratic primary election of August 27, 1906, was nominated for chief justice, his opponent being Samuel D. Weakley, who had succeeded to the position on the death of Chief Justice Thomas N. McClellan; and on November 6, 1906, was overwhelmingly elected. He resigned the position in 1909. Later he accepted the position of division counsel for the Atlantic Coast line railroad. In the Democratic primaries of 1920 he was nominated as representative of the 2nd congressional district, defeating L. H. Brassell and Hon. S. Hugh Dent. Judge Tyson is a Democrat, and a Baptist. Married: October 20, 1879, at Lexington, Va., to Mary Dossie, daughter of Dr. James R. and wife Martha (Sloan) Jordan. Children: 1. George Baker, m. Tinsie Moore; 2. Martha Jordan; 3. Mary Dossie, m. Kenneth Murphy; 4. Ellen Sloan, m. B. Frank Noble; 5. James Jordan. Residence: Montgomery.

U

ULLMAN, SAMUEL, business man; formerly rabbi in charge of the Jewish congregation in Birmingham, where he resides.

ULMER, ISAAC BARTON, planter, was born January 7, 1862, in Dallas County; son of Isaac Barton and Abigail Johnson (Cromwell) Ulmer, the former who was a native of Beauford District, S. C., was prominent in the nullification troubles of that state, and was lieutenant-colonel of one of its infantry regiments; grandson of John and Margaret (Barton) Ulmer, who lived in Beauford District, S. C., and of Oliver and Sarah (Johnson) Cromwell, who lived at Charleston, S. C.; great-grandson of a Johnson, who was a native of New York, a captain in the Revolutionary War; and a descendant of Phillip Ulmer, a native of Germany, who engaged in the revolutionary disturbances in that country, somewhere near the city of Ulm, as a result of which his party was defeated, his property confiscated, and he fled with his family to England, and then to the colony of South Carolina early in the eighteenth century, had four sons, from one of whom this family was descended. The Cromwell line runs back to the English branch of that name. Mr. Ulmer's early education was obtained in Orrville, Dallas County, and then at Green Springs. He attended Oglethorpe university near Milledgeville, Ga., and was in the junior class when the War of Secession broke out. He entered the C. S. Army, in 1861, as private, was later first sergeant in Co. C, Wirt Adam's cavalry, was transferred to Co. A, Third Alabama cavalry, was courier on the staff of Gen. William T. Martin, was in Wheeler's Corps, cavalry, and was a member of Gen. A. S. Johnston's escort at Shiloh. After the war, he engaged in farming. He served for some years as deputy clerk of the Marengo law and equity court, of Demopolis. He is a Democrat, an Episcopalian, and a Knight of Pythias. Married: to Ellen Kitton Du Boutz, widow of F. S. Denson, daughter of Dr. Joseph John Louis and Kitty Crusoe (Beck) Du Boutz, who lived at Pushmataha; granddaughter of Gabriel and Deborah (Montgomery) Du Boutz, the former of Etienne, France, who served in De Grasse's fleet at Yorktown; great-granddaughter of John and Mary (Wilcox) Montgomery; great-great-granddaughter of Alexander Hugh Montgomery; great-great-great-granddaughter of William Montgomery; and great-great-great-great-granddaughter of Capt. Alexander Montgomery, who was a descendant of one of the two brothers who emigrated from Scotland about 1690, and settled in County Derry, Ireland, one of whom participated in the battle of Boyne, as captain of grenadiers under King William. Children: 1. Joseph Barton, d. in infancy; 2. Abby Cromwell, Demopolis, m. John R. Harper, deceased; 3. Du Boutz, Demopolis; 4. Edward Workam, m. Nettie Lipscomb, Demopolis; 5. Mariana, Demopolis; 6. UNDERWOOD, LUCIEN M., professor of biology, at the Alabama polytechnic institute, 1895-96, and later professor at Columbia university, N. Y.

UNDERWOOD, NIMROD T., physician; graduate of the medical department of the University of Alabama, 1886; licensed to practice by the county board of Franklin. Residence: Russellville.

UNDERWOOD, OSCAR WILDER, lawyer, United States congressman and senator, was born May 6, 1862, in Louisville, Ky.; son of Eugene and Frederica Virginia (Smith) Underwood, the former, born in Glasgow, Ky., 1818, a lawyer, who practised first in Bowling Green, Ky., and later in Nashville, Tenn., Louisville, Ky., St. Paul, Minn., finally returning to Louisville, member of the original board of directors of the Louisville and Nashville railroad, captured by the federals, charged with being a Southern sympathizer, released and later took no part in the controversy, although two brothers were in the Confederate Army, one of whom, John C., was a major; grandson of Joseph Rogers and Eliza M. (McCown) Underwood, the former a native of Goochland County, Va., removed to Kentucky in 1800, with his uncle, Edmund Rogers, and his cousin, General George Rogers Clark, graduated from Transylvania college in 1811, studied law under Robert Wyckliffe in Lexington, lieutenant in the 13th Kentucky infantry, taking part in the battle with the Indians and British opposite Fort Meigs and in Dudley's defeat, was wounded while in command of the company and taken prisoner and forced to run the Indian gauntlet, was paroled and returned home in a canoe, the first white man to make the water trip across Ohio, was admitted to the bar, practised in Glasgow, Ky., represented Barren County in the Kentucky legislature, 1816-19, removed to Bowling Green in 1832, and represented Warren County in the legislature, 1825-26, and 1848, when he was speaker, and again in 1861, was presidential elector, 1824 and 1844, Whig candidate for lieutenant governor of Kentucky, 1828, judge of the court of appeals, 1828-35, Whig representative in congress, 1835-43, U. S. senator, 1847-53, as the colleague of Henry Clay with whom he agreed in the advocacy of the gradual emancipation of the slaves, delegate to the Democratic national convention at Chicago, 1864, died at his country seat, "Ironwood," near Bowling Green, Ky., 1876, and of Jabez Smith, born in Groton, Conn., moved to Petersburg, Va., at eighteen years of age, built at that point one of the first cotton mills in the South, for a number of years, prior to the War of Secession, was mayor of that city and died at the age of seventy-six during the federal siege of Petersburg, a Southern sympathizer, having a son and two grandsons in the Confederate Army, one of the latter being killed during the siege of Petersburg; great-grandson of Capt. John and Frances (Rogers) Underwood, the former a Virginia planter, and at one time high sheriff of Goochland County, Va., and member of the house of delegates, that State, and of John and Chalia (Rice) Trotter of Glasgow, Ky.; great-great-grandson of Col. William Thomas and Ann (Taylor) Underwood, the former a planter in Goochland County, Va., before the Revolutionary War, high sheriff of that county and at one time member of the house of delegates of Virginia, and of George and Frances (Pollard) Rogers, of Virginia; great-great-great-grandson of Thomas William and Elizabeth (Taylor) Underwood, of Virginia. Senator Underwood is also a direct descendant of Col. William Byrd of "Westover," Va. He has enjoyed exceptional educational advantages, the foundations laid in private and public schools of Kentucky and Minnesota, a student at Rugby school in Louisville, Ky., graduating there in 1880, after which he entered the University of Virginia, where he graduated in 1881 in the academic department. He returned to that institution for his legal training and graduated in 1883, being admitted to the practice at once by the supreme court of Virginia. He located in Birmingham and entered upon his professional career there, September, 1884. He was chairman Democratic executive committee of the ninth district, 1892; chairman Democratic campaign committee that adopted the present constitution of Alabama, 1901. In 1894, he was elected to the Fifty-fourth congress, representing the ninth district composed of Blount, Jefferson, Bibb, Hale and Perry Counties, and was continuously re-elected to the succeeding eight congresses. While in the house he early advocated measures to revive the American merchant marine, and government aid to an improved system of highways. He served on the committees on judiciary, on rules, arid lands, appropriations, and on the ways and means committee of which he was chairman for four years, the position carrying with it floor leadership of the majority of the party of the house. He was Democratic whip of the house of representatives in the fifty-sixth congress, and one of the two Democratic members of the rules committee in the fifty-seventh congress. The Democrats were swept into power in 1910 through a popular protest against Republican policies and methods. The principal promises on which the former party won the election were to revise and liberalize the rules of the house; to pass a bill providing for the publication of campaign expenses preceding elections; to admit New Mexico and Arizona to statehood; to pass a resolution submitting a constitutional amendment for the popular election of United States senators; to economize in national expenditures; to revise the tariff downward to a revenue basis. All of these pro-election promises were kept by the party making them. The rules of the house were liberalized by the Democrats by a radical change in the manner of appointing committees. The ways and means committee was designated the committee on committees, thus vesting in it a right which had been lodged in every speaker of the house from the first to the sixty-first congress. The responsibility of readjusting the committees fell upon Mr. Underwood mainly, as chairman of the ways and means committee, the nominations of that committee being approved by the house. A political writer of the period wrote: "The Democrats had a majority of nearly seventy. They had not had possession of the house for sixteen years. They thought they had a chance to elect a president, and each man of the two hundred and twenty-eight Democrats was full of schemes for making this chance a certainty. They were all anxious to revise the tariff in order to keep faith with the people, but they had many plans for revision and many shades of opinion as to how it should be revised. They felt their power and importance. They were eager, avid, enthusiastic and none too prudent." From this analysis of the temper of his own party, together with the natural opposition and tactics of the Republican membership, it can be seen that Mr. Underwood's responsibilities as leader were heavy, his task an increasingly difficult one. To hold his membership in line and make such a tariff law as would respond to the wants and needs of a hundred million people of widely divergent interests and bring about the election of a Democratic president in 1912 was the responsibility laid upon him. Mr. Underwood's one summary of the situation is historically significant, made in a public utterance at the time: "The urgent necessity for a revision of the present tariff laws of this country is apparent to all. In the first place, the present revenues are again running behind expenditures and are not sufficient to support the government; in the next place, development of improved business methods and advances in the process of manufactures due to improved machinery have made the taxes levied under the present Payne bill and the Dingley bill out of adjustment with the present needs of the business interests of the country. In many instances these taxes have prohibited importations to such an extent that they do not produce revenue, and have become a direct injury to the great productive interests of the nation. . . . There has never been a tariff bill enacted into law by the Democratic party that has not favored the doctrine of a tariff for revenue only as opposed to a tariff levied along free trade lines, such as the revenue laws of Great Britain. . . . The Democratic party does not intend to abandon the custom houses, but favors a policy of levying customs duties for revenue purposes only, at rates that will not destroy fair and honest competition in the home market. This position will be accomplished by the reduction of tariff taxes provided for in the laws now on the statute books, to a point where fair competition will bring about reasonable prices and destroy monopolistic tendencies caused by the high duties now levied at the custom houses." It was upon the theory therefore of a tariff for revenue only basis, that the Underwood tariff law was written and swept the party into power in 1912, thereby putting President Woodrow Wilson in the White House. As chairman of the ways and means committee of the house, Mr. Underwood led all tariff debates on the floor, and at once was recognized, not only by the people of his own country, but of all countries of the world, as a man of unusual clarity of thought, and of wide knowledge on finances, exports and imports, and taxation. As floor leader of his party it fell to his lot to arrange all controversial debates and to guide his following safely through the spirited contests in the lower house that not infrequently resulted in physical encounters. Mr. Underwood's coolness, when other men were impassioned, his fairness towards opponents, his loyalty to his party, his parliamentary generalship, challenged the admiration of the nation and elicited for him serious consideration as a statesman of presidential calibre. Not till then had a man from the south been seriously considered for that high office since the War of Secession. Alabama showed a just pride in the son of her adoption, and under the leadership of Senator John H. Bankhead, who had for many years served with him in the house, the Underwood campaign for the Democratic selection was launched. Mr. Underwood himself was too occupied with his heavy duties in the house to give any personal attention to the efforts his friends were making in his behalf, but the movement assumed practical proportions and would undoubtedly have gone to fruition but for the failure of leaders from another section to keep their agreements in the Baltimore convention. Alabama, first on the roll of states had yielded on roll call in national Democratic conventions for a half century, but at the Baltimore convention in the summer of 1912, when the name of Alabama was called, William B. Bankhead, now a member of congress, son of the senator, stepped upon the platform at midnight and presented the name of Underwood. The state delegations from Alabama, Connecticut, Florida, Georgia and Mississippi were instructed by their states to cast their full strength for him in the convention, and to remain by that vote until released by Senator Bankhead to whose leadership his interests had been intrusted. Posts of delegations from Maryland, North Carolina, Tennessee and Porto Rico, also supported Mr. Underwood until his name was withdrawn from the contest.

Mr. Underwood, in the house, opposed the initiative, referendum and recall, a political reform led by William J. Bryan, the one time Democratic leader.

In 1914, he was nominated in the Democratic primaries for the United States senate, defeating Richmond P. Hobson, and was elected in the fall to serve from March 4, 1915, to March 4, 1921. He was re-elected to succeed himself in 1920, having defeated in the Democratic primaries of the spring, Samuel D. Weakley and L. B. Musgrove. When he came to the senate he was assigned to the committees on appropriations, on interstate commerce and on some smaller committees. Later he became a member of the rules committee. On April 27, 1920, he was elected minority leader of the senate, the Republicans having gained the majority by the defeat of two Democrats in the elections. Senator Underwood participated in, and in the absence because of illness of the chairman of the finance committee, had charge, of all the great revenue, finance and appropriation measures during the European War period a part of which time the United States was actively involved. He is the only Democrat since the time of Henry Clay who has been the titled leader of his party in both houses of congress. He assumed his new party responsibilities in the senate with the same qualities of fairness, coolness and parliamentary generalship that had characterized his leadership in the house of representatives. With that alertness that especially devolves upon a minority leader, Mr. Underwood faithfully maintains his post. His knowledge of the American tariff systems of finance acquired in the house is of great value in the deliberations of the committees on which he serves in the senate. Jointly with Senator Bankhead, he secured government appropriations for the development of Muscle Shoals water power for the manufacture of explosive nitrogen in war and agricultural nitrogen in peace, the construction of Wilson Dam, on the Tennessee River in North Alabama, and has performed other services for his State and section of incalculable value. Shortly after taking his seat in the senate, in 1915, he induced President Wilson to call for the first comprehensive survey of the transportation problem, and himself drew the resolution that set in motion that survey, and in 1916, stood alone for the judicial settlement of those railway wage disputes which tend to imperil the national welfare and the livelihood of railway employees, and saw that principle written into law and signed, February 28, by the President. In voting against the eighteenth or prohibition amendment to the constitution of the United States he said to his constituents. "I have no apologies to make for my vote against the amendment. I belong to the old Democratic school that believes in maintaining in its integrity the right of the people of the several states to govern themselves in all matters that have not been delegated to the Federal government; but the prohibition amendment now being a part of the constitution, I see no reason why it should not be enforced with the same degree of strictness and justice that we enforce the quarantine laws, the laws prohibiting the counterfeiting of money, and all other laws that fall within the jurisdiction of the federal government." It is said of him that: "His idea of government is fundamental and constructive rather than correctional or penal. He has shown a consistent purpose to set up laws which are constructive and affirmative in their action, which remove impediments, which encourage progressive tendencies, which provide for frictionless administration and invite respect and observance." Senator Underwood is an Episcopalian; Mason; Knight of Pythias; and an Elk. Married: (1) October 8, 1886, at Charlottesville, Va., to Eugenia Massie, who died January 31, 1900, in Birmingham; (2) September 10, 1904, to Bertha, daughter of Joseph H. Woodward (q. v.). Children: by first wife, 1. John Lewis, m. Miss Campbell, Birmingham; 2. Oscar Wilder, jr., lawyer, m. Ellen Pratt, Washington, D. C. Residence: Birmingham.

UNDERWOOD, WILLIAM THOMPSON, business man, was born July 24, 1848, at Nashville, Tenn., and died June 25, 1916, in Williamsburg, Ky.; was son of Eugene and Katherine (Thompson) Underwood, the former who was a native of Glasgow, Barren County, Ky., who lived at Nashville and was one of the pioneer officers of the Louisville and Nashville railroad, and a lawyer; grandson of Joseph Rogers and Eliza (Trotter) Underwood who lived at Glasgow, and Bowling Green, Ky., the former who was a cousin of George Rogers Clark, was a congressman and senator from Kentucky, and was a contemporary of Henry Clay also an intimate friend and counselor, and of William Thompson and Susan (Vance) Thompson who lived at Nashville, Tenn.; and a half brother of Senator Oscar Underwood. The family history is traced back to Shropshire, England, from whence the family came to America with the Lees of Virginia in the seventeenth century. The early days of William T. Underwood were spent in Kentucky and he received his education in the public schools of Louisville and at the Forrest Academy. Began the study of law early; was admitted to practice in the Kentucky courts; located in the northwest and ventured in the state of Minnesota with land deals and speculations; and settled in Birmingham in 1881. In 1883, he and Henry F. DeBardeleben formed a company and opened the Mary Pratt furnace; in 1884 they leased a tract of ore land from the Alice Furnace Company on Red Mountain and opened the Reading Mines; operated mines not alone in the Birmingham district but included Blount and Etowah Counties and even extended to Whitfield County, Ky. Mr. Underwood was also a director in the First National Bank and in the Birmingham Trust and Savings Company. He was a Democrat; member of the Episcopal church; and a Knight Templar. Married: October 4, 1871, at St. Paul, Minn., to Miss Marinda Burnett, daughter of Oscar and Frederika Virginia (Smith) Wilder, the former a native of Maryland who moved to Louisville, Ky., when a boy and died there in 1854, the latter who was a daughter of Jabez Sidney Smith, mayor of Petersburg, and owner of cotton mills there. Children: 1. Kenneth, b. May 30, 1887 in Birmingham, m. Miss Lucie Crommelin Wood of Montgomery; one child, May Crommelin Underwood, residence Montgomery; 2. Virginia, b. He received his early education from private tutors; attended the University of Alabama, 1833-35; and later the University of Virginia. He was admitted to the bar in 1837; represented Lawrence County in the State legislature, 1843 and 1844; removed to Lauderdale County in 1845, and represented that county in the legislature, 1847 and 1849, serving as speaker of the house and again elected as a member of the house in 1853. In 1850, at the first election of judges, he was elected judge of the fourth circuit, but resigned in 1853 in order to re-enter the legislature. He removed to Huntsville in 1855, and practised law with R. C.

Brickell and S. D. Cabaniss. He was a delegate to the Charleston and Richmond conventions, and upon the secession of Alabama was appointed by Governor Moore a commissioner to Tennessee to confer with that State's authorities as to the best policy of the slave states. In February, 1861, upon the organization of the Confederate government, President Davis appointed him secretary of war. The following fall, September 21, 1861, he resigned from the cabinet, accepted the commission of brigadier general, served in the department of Alabama and West Florida, and commanded the forces at Mobile and Montgomery. He resigned his commission in the spring of 1862, was appointed judge of the military court the following year, and served until the end of the war. In 1865, he resumed the practice of law at Huntsville with Judge Brickell. He served as president, 1875, of the second constitutional convention, his father having been president of the first, in 1818. WALKER, ROBERT HENRY, editor and immigration commissioner, was born at Athens, Limestone County, March 18, 1875; son of William Harrison and Sarah Elizabeth (Ryan) Walker (q. v.). He was educated in the common schools of his county and at the North Alabama agricultural school, now the 8th district agricultural school, at Athens. On January 1, 1893, he purchased the "Limestone Democrat," a weekly, published at Athens, and has since been engaged in the newspaper business, with the exception of two years when he was located at Tuscaloosa and at Meridian, Miss. He was appointed immigration commissioner by Gov. B. B. Comer, on October 19, 1910. He was secretary of the National editorial association; is a Democrat; a Baptist; and Knight of Pythias. Married: January 9, 1901, at Athens, to Memory Pryor, daughter of Robert Anderson and Aurora (Pryor) McClellan; granddaughter of Senator Luke Pryor, niece of the late chief justice Thomas N. McClellan (q. v.), and a sister of associate justice Thomas C. McClellan (q. v.), a descendant of Richard Bennett, colonial governor of Virginia, and of Richard Bland, who rendered important civil service to his county. Children: 1. William Walker McClellan. Residence: Athens.

WALKER, SAMUEL, public official, was a native of South Carolina, and died about 1842. At an early date he removed to Alabama; served Madison County in the legislature, 1819, 1820, 1824, 1828, 1833, 1834, and 1840; and elected speaker of the house in 1840. He resigned the office owing to ill health, and was accorded a unanimous vote of thanks by the house. In a short time after resignation he died. Last residence: Madison County.

WALKER, TANDY, soldier of the American Revolution, private, particular service not disclosed; enrolled on September 20, 1838, payment to date from January 1, 1828; annual allowance, $96.—Pension Book, State Branch Bank, Mobile.

WALKER, TANDY, pioneer blacksmith and woodsman, was born in Virginia and died in Alabama or Texas, in 1842. One of his grandmothers was a Miss Tandy. He removed to the Tombigbee Country, 1801, then an Indian frontier, guarded by military posts, and beginning to be occupied by white pioneer families. Mr. Walker was the government blacksmith at St. Stephens, then an army post, and was also interpreter between the whites and Indians. He was the hero of one of the most thrilling of the border incidents, preserved in Alabama history, the rescue of Mrs. Crawley, a Tennessee white woman, who had been kidnapped and brought to the "great falls" now Tuscaloosa, by "Little Warrior" to be burned at the stake. He was a fearless Indian fighter. Married: Mary Mays. Children: 1. Sarah Newstep, m. Caswell Reynolds of Newbern; 2. Millie, m. Edward Easley.

WALKER, THOMAS A., lawyer, circuit judge, legislator, was born January 5, 1811, in Jasper County, Ga., and died October 29, 1888, in Selma; son of Thomas T. and Feribee (Smith) Walker, the former a native of Hancock County, Ga., who came to Bibb County in 1819, and in 1820 moved to Montevallo, Shelby County, becoming a planter of that county; grandson of David Walker, a native of Buckingham County, Va., who was of English ancestry, and served in the Revolutionary War under Washington, and of Ezekiel Smith, a native of South Carolina, who was of English ancestry, and also a soldier in the Revolutionary War. He received his early education in the common schools of his native state, and in 1822, removed with his parents to Shelby County. He entered Cumberland college, at Princeton, Ky., where he remained for two years and then joined the junior class at the University of Alabama, at Tuscaloosa, where he was graduated in 1833. Among his classmates at the university were A. B. Meek, George D. Shortridge, one of the circuit court judges of the state, William R. Smith, who was later, on the circuit court bench, and a member of congress from the Fourth congressional district. He then commenced to read law in the office of Chancellor Anderson Crenshaw of Butler County, and was soon after admitted to the bar. He then settled at Elyton, in Jefferson County, where he commenced the practice of his profession. At the outbreak of the Creek Indian War, he was holding the office of brigadier general to which he had been elected in 1835, and by order of Gov. Clay raised a battalion of troops for the service and led them to Columbus, Ga., where they were mustered into the command of Gen. Jessup. He also raised a company, of which he was elected captain, for service in the Mexican War, and offered the company to the governor, but as the regiment was already complete, the offer was not accepted.

Judge Walker was, in 1836, elected by the legislature solicitor of the ninth judicial circuit, which was then first created, having been formerly occupied by the Creek and Cherokee Indians. His competitors were Felix G. McConnell, George W. Stone, and H. A. Rutledge, all of Talladega. He resigned the position of solicitor when elected to represent Calhoun County in the State legislature in 1839. By successive elections he was retained in the lower house until 1842, when he was elected to the State senate. During the session of 1841, he was made chairman of the judiciary committee. He held his seat in the senate through the years, 1842, 1843 and 1844, and during the last two sessions, served as chairman of the judiciary committee of the senate. At the close of the session of 1844, he declined being a candidate for re-election, and devoted his time exclusively to the practice of law. In 1847, he was elected judge of the judicial circuit by the legislature over George W. Lane of Madison. Two years later, the constitution of the state was altered, and the election of judges given to the people of the several circuits. Judge Walker became a candidate for the office before the voters of his circuit, and again defeated Judge Lane. He continued on the bench until 1858, when he was defeated by Smith D. Hale of Madison. He was president of the Selma and Rome railroad, 1858-1864; was elected to the State senate in 1859 and continued in that body until 1865, serving as president of the senate, 1861-1863. During the latter years of his life, he engaged in planting. Judge Walker took an active part in ferreting out and forestalling the scheme to defraud the Bank of the State of Alabama and its branches. He was a trustee of the University of Alabama, 1840-1843; and a Jeffersonian Democrat. Married: August 31, 1836, in Calhoun County, to Sarah M. McGehee, who died in April, 1880, daughter of Col. William McGehee, who came from Virginia to Alabama, settled in Benton County, and later moved to Jacksonville. Judge Walker had no children. Last residence: Selma.

WALKER, WILLIAM A., pioneer and merchant, was born February 23, 1811, in Mecklenburg County, near Charlotte, N. C., deceased; son of Richard B. and Ann (Flanagan) Walker, natives of the same county, who later moved to Madison County, Mo. He attended the country schools of North Carolina, and the schools of Missouri for a short time. His parents remained in Missouri for four years, and in 1823, emigrated to Jefferson County, and settled within six miles of Elyton. For the first year, Mr. Walker worked on the farm, then began to go to school, usually attending in the winter time. At that time there were no Indians in the county, but it was inhabited by wild animals. He lived at that place with his parents for four years, then went to a point on Five Mile Creek, eight miles north of Birmingham. The family lived at that place for thirty or forty years, both parents dying after the close of the War of Secession. Mr. Walker left home in the early part of 1835, and lived in the Five Mile Valley, seven miles from the present city of Birmingham, with Col. George Green. He served in the army under Col. Jessup during the Creek War, joining a militia company raised by Col. McMillan, and received a land warrant for his services, which he later sold to purchasing agents of the Illinois Central railroad then being built. After his return from the Creek War he went to Elyton and clerked in Abner McKillough's store, from 1837-1840, and in 1840 began merchandising in Elyton on his own account. He continued in that occupation until 1862, when he retired. Married: in 1840, to Corilla Margaret Porter, sister of Judge M. T. Porter. Children: 1. Mary A.; 2. Margaret; 3. William A., jr. (Hill) Walker, natives of Putnam County, Ga., the former a planter and a graduate of the University of Georgia; grandson of William Walker and John Hill, of Putnam County, Ga., respectively; great-grandson of William Walker, whose father emigrated to America from Ireland before the Revolutionary War, serving throughout that struggle, and of John Hill, also a native of Ireland, who fought for American independence, the latter living to be one hundred and twenty-six years of age and was married six times. Dr. Walker was educated in the schools of his native county and at the University of Georgia where he graduated in 1850; studied medicine under Dr. J. W. Pitts in Harris County, Ga., later at Jefferson medical college, Philadelphia, Pa., graduating in 1854 and locating at Perote in 1857. He entered the Confederate service, February 13, 1861, as 2nd lieutenant, Co. B, 1st Alabama infantry regiment; served one year as 1st and 2nd lieutenant of "Perote Guards" at Pensacola; re-enlisted at expiration of term of service in Co. B, 53rd Alabama cavalry regiment and was made adjutant-general of Hannon's brigade; participated in the battles of Lookout Mountain and all other battles from Dalton to Atlanta; later he served under Hood and Johnston, and was mustered out at Hamburg, S. C. He resumed the practice of his profession at Perote after the cessation of hostilities, engaging also in planting and the drug business. He is a member of the Bullock County and the State medical associations, and a Mason. Married: May, 1862, to Mary V., daughter of Dr. J. W. and Mary F. Pitts, of Jasper and Monroe Counties, Ga., the former a surgeon of the 36th Alabama infantry regiment C. S. Army. There were five children to this marriage. Residence: Perote.

WALKER, WILLIAM AUGUSTUS, lawyer, was born January 7, 1846, near Elyton; son of William A. and Corilla Margaret (Porter) Walker (q. v.). He was prepared for college in the schools of Elyton, and entered the University of Alabama in 1861. He left the University in September, 1863, to join the Seventh Alabama cavalry, formed from the corps of university cadets, under Capt. C. P. Storrs. He continued in service until the close of the war, at which time he held the rank of sergeant, and had spent some time in a Federal prison. After the war, he taught school for eight months, then began the study of law. He was admitted to the bar in 1867, and began to practice law in partnership with Burwell Boykin Lewis, who later gave up his seat in congress to assume the presidency of the University of Alabama. He was elected solicitor of Jefferson County in 1868, and held that position until 1876. For some time he was junior member of the firm of Cobb, Lewis and Walker, and in 1870, formed a co-partnership with Hon. G. W. Hewitt, for eight years a member of congress. The firm later took in Ben Porter to form the firm of Hewitt, Walker and Porter, and engaged in a large corporation business and general practice. Later, Mr. Walker became a member of the firm of Tillman, Campbell and Walker of Birmingham. He served one term in the State legislature as representative from Jefferson County, 1878-1880; was a stockholder and director of the First national bank of Birmingham, and in 1885 was elected president of that institution, resigning the position a few months later. WARE, HORACE, iron manufacturer, was born April 11, 1812, in Lynn, Mass., and died July, 1890, in Birmingham; son of Jonathan and Roxana (Howe) Ware, residents of Massachusetts, New York, North Carolina, and Alabama, locating in Bibb County. Mr. Ware received his early education in his native state and in North Carolina, whither he had gone in childhood with his parents. He learned the iron business from his father, who erected a water power forge in Bibb County, later selling it to his son. In 1840 he bought the iron ore beds in Shelby County, and in a few years erected a cold blast furnace for the manufacture of pig iron, the first, or at most, the second furnace plant in Alabama. The product was hauled six miles by wagon to the Coosa river and placed on flat boats bound for Montgomery, Prattville and Mobile. He manufactured all kinds of cooking utensils, heating and cooking stoves. He was the pioneer rolling mill operator in the State, beginning in 1859, the erection of a mill for the manufacture of iron bars and cotton ties. In 1865, Federal troops under Gen. Wilson destroyed this property, but it was later rebuilt by northern capital. After a connection of forty years, he sold his interest in 1881. He purchased, during the early sixties, iron properties in Talladega County, forming in 1872, a partnership with Col. S. S. Glidden, of Ohio, and organized the Alabama iron company. In 1881, A. L. Tyler and Samuel Noble of Anniston, purchased Mr. Glidden's interest, the new company being called the Clifton iron company. In 1888, he sold his holdings to his partners, having four years earlier become interested in Sheffield, being president of the first furnace erected at that place. In 1881, he bought the Kelly furnace, near Jefferson, Texas, where he manufactured car wheel iron, but in 1883, he sold his property. Being familiar with the mineral resources of the State he foresaw the development of the region and predicted the splendid things that have since developed. Married: (1) to Martha A. Woodruff, (2) in Columbiana, to Mary, daughter of George and Matilda T. (Roper) Harris, the former a native of Monroe County, Tenn., a lawyer who lived in McMinn County, Tenn.; granddaughter of Jesse and Matilda T. WASHINGTON, BOOKER TALIAFERRO, educator and author, was born in 1858 or 1859, a slave near Hale's Ford, Franklin County, Va., and died at Tuskegee, November 14, 1915. After the war he removed with his mother, Jane, and his step-father, Washington Ferguson, to Malden, W. Va., where he was employed in the salt mines and later in the coal mines. He was for a year and a half in the employ of Gen. Lewis Ruffner at Charleston, W. Va. Being ambitious for an education, he and several other boys secured a young negro from Ohio to teach them. However, he was able to attend only a short time, and was thus forced to go to him at night for instruction. In this way he was prepared for Hampton Institute, Va., which he entered in 1872. He worked his way through school, and graduated in 1875. Returning home he taught at Malden from 1875 to 1878; spent 1878-79, as a student at Wayland seminary, Washington, D. C.; and in 1879 he was called to Hampton institute to take charge of the discipline, clothing, and rooms of the Indian students. During the next year, in addition to his other duties, he conducted a night school for indigent young men and women, who had to work during the day. The legislature of Alabama, February 10, 1881, appropriated $2,000 for the maintenance of a normal school for the education of colored teachers, to be located at Tuskegee. Upon the recommendation of Gen. Samuel C. Armstrong, president of Hampton, he was chosen by the board of commissioners of the new school as principal and professor of mental and moral science. The school opened July 4, 1881, and under his leadership took a place of prominence in the field of negro education, second only to Hampton. On February 16, 1883, the appropriation was increased to $3000; and on December 13, 1892, and February 21, 1893, the name was changed to Tuskegee normal and industrial institute, and the corporate powers increased and enlarged. From the date of his entrance upon the work, in 1881, until his death in 1915, Tuskegee was his field of labor, the laboratory in which he worked out his plans for the elevation and the betterment of the negro, and from which he became a character of nation wide interest. From a simple experiment in a one room house, the school has grown until its physical plant and equipment serve a student body of hundreds, drawn from many states, and whose appeal has prompted numerous gifts of money and property. In 1903, the school received an endowment fund of $600,000 from Andrew Carnegie, the sole condition of the gift being that the "founder and director of the institution, Principal Washington, and his family shall always be assured support from the income." From Harvard university, in 1896, he received the honorary A. M. degree, and in 1901, LL. D., from Dartmouth. He spent several months in 1899 in traveling over continental Europe, where he was cordially received. In 1903 he declined the invitation of the British South African company to visit South Africa for a study and report on racial conditions there. Among his many addresses on racial and educational subjects, one of the most significant was the opening address on "Negro day" at the Atlanta exposition of 1896. Author: "Black diamonds," selections from his speeches, arranged by Mrs. V. E. Matthews, 1898; "Sowing and reaping," 1900; "The story of my life and work," 1900; "Up from slavery," an autobiography, 1900, 1901, 1903; "Future of the American negro," 1900; "Character building," 1903; "Working with the hands," 1904; "Tuskegee and its people," 1905; "Life of Frederick Douglass," 1905; "Putting the most into life," 1906; "The negro in business," 1907; "The negro in the South," 1907; "The Story of the negro," 2 vols., 1909; and "My Larger Education," 1911, besides numbers of newspaper and periodical articles. His own account of his work will be found in "Up from slavery," 1900, and he has been the subject of two elaborate biographies: Riley, "Life and times of Booker T. Washington," 1916, and Scott and Howe, "Booker T. Washington, Builder of a civilization," 1916. Married: (1) in 1882, to Fannie N. Smith, of Malden, W. Va.; (2) in 1885, to Olivia A. Davidson; (3) October 12, 1898, to Maggie I. Murray, a graduate of Fisk university, and at the time, assistant principal of the Tuskegee institute, and also president of the National association of colored women. Children, by first wife: 1. Portia; by second wife: 2. Booker Taliaferro, jr.; 3. Ernest Davidson. Last residence: Tuskegee.

Tolbert Letcher; 1909-10, with the firm of Troy, Watts and Letcher; and from 1910 to the time of his death alone. He was the attorney for the plaintiff in the case of Bailey vs. State of Alabama, in which the question of constitutionality of Alabama labor contract law was raised; resulting in the act being declared by U. S. supreme court, on January 3, 1911, as unconstitutional. From 1908 to 1911, he served as county attorney of Montgomery. He was also a member of the Alabama epileptic commission to locate and erect buildings for epileptic colony; of the Law league of America; and a member of the Sigma Alpha Epsilon college fraternity. Married: on November 4, 1908, at Montgomery, to Virginia Tyson Norwood, daughter of Joseph and Virginia (Tyson) Norwood (q. v.). Last residence: Montgomery.

WATTS, GARRETT, soldier of the American Revolution, aged 78, and a resident of Perry County; private N. C. Militia; enrolled on July 16, 1834, under act of Congress of June 7, 1832, payment to date from March 4, 1831; annual allowance, $23.33.—Revolutionary Pension Roll, in vol. xiv, Sen. doc. 514, 23rd Cong., 1st sess., 1833-34.

WATTS, JOHN WADE, lawyer, was born August 30, 1846, in Butler County, and died April 5, 1913; son of Gov. Thomas Hill and Eliza B. (Allen) Watts (q. v.). He was educated in the private schools of Montgomery, and graduated from the University of Virginia, B. L., 1867. He served on the body-guard of Gen. E. W. Rucker, C. S. Army, 1863; and on the staff of Gen. James H. Clanton, 1864, with the rank of captain. After the close of the War of Secession he practiced law in partnership with his father in Montgomery. He was a Democrat; and a Baptist. Married: June 5, 1872, to Nannie Ross Sanders, of Uniontown. Children: 1. Gabriella, deceased; 2. Sophia, secretary to commissioner of conservation; 3. John; 4. Madge, m. Gaston Scott; 5. Polly; 6. Annie Campbell, deceased; 7. Flournoy. Last residence: Montgomery.

WATTS, THOMAS HENRY, lawyer, was born August 3, 1853, at Montgomery, and died at that place, March 29, 1905; son of Thomas Hill and Eliza Brown (Allen) Watts (q. v.). He was educated in the private schools of Montgomery, the Bellevue high school, Va., and at the University of Alabama, 1871-74, graduating with the B. S. and LL. B. degrees. He was founder and first editor of the magazine published at the University of Alabama; and was also quartermaster of cadets with rank of captain. Upon graduation he entered the practice with his father in Montgomery, and was at different times associated with his brother, John H. Watts, Col. Daniel S. Troy, Henry C. Tompkins, Alex Troy, and Frank S. Caffey. During the constitutional convention of 1875, he served as assistant secretary. He was elected a member of the city council of Montgomery in 1883, serving until 1893. While president of the city council he was for a time acting mayor. While serving in this capacity he welcomed Gen. John B. Gordon, when he came to meet Ex-President Davis upon the occasion of dedicating the Confederate monument. He was nominated for the constitutional convention of 1899, and elected to the one which convened in 1901. He was a Democrat; Red Man; Knight of Pythias; and a member of the Ancient Order of United Workmen. Married: on December 3, 1874, in Tuscaloosa, to Johness Bealle, daughter of Dr. Simeon J. and Martha Jane (Bealle) Eddins, of that place. Children: 1. Jane, m. D. W. Troy; 2. John Wade, m. Annie Perry Reid; 3. Edward S., m. Virginia Tyson Norwood (q. v.); 4. Hugh Kirkman, m. Alice Pitcher; 5. Troy, unmarried. Last residence: Montgomery.

WATTS, THOMAS HILL, lawyer, soldier, attorney-general, Confederate States of America, and governor of Alabama, was born January 3, 1819, in Butler County, about a mile from Fort Bibb and sixteen miles west of the present town of Greenville, and died September 16, 1892, in Montgomery; son of John Hughes and Prudence (Hill) Watts, the former a native of Fauquier County, Va., who came to Alabama in 1819, later becoming prominent planters, the latter of Clarke County, Ga.; grandson of Thomas Watts of Virginia, who served in the Revolutionary War under John Marshall, later chief justice of the supreme court of the United States and of Thomas Hill, of Clarke County, Ga. He was of Welsh and English descent. Governor Watts was educated in the schools of Butler County and at Airy Mount academy, Dallas County; and at the University of Virginia, where he graduated in 1840, with honors. Though just out of college, he took an active part in the presidential campaign of 1840, supporting Harrison against Van Buren. In 1841, he was admitted to the bar at Greenville, remaining there until 1847 when he removed to Montgomery. He represented Butler in the legislature of 1842, 1844 and 1845. In 1848 he was an elector at large for General Taylor. In 1849 he was elected to the lower house from Montgomery County, and in 1853 State senator from Montgomery and Autauga Counties. He was the "Know Nothing" candidate for congress in 1856, but was defeated. In 1860 he supported Bell and Everett. He was what was called a Union man, but with the election of Lincoln on a purely sectional platform, he changed his ideas and became a Secessionist and was elected to the convention of 1861, with William L. Yancey representing Montgomery County. He became chairman of the judiciary committee and exerted much influence in the convention. He maintained "that the power of the convention to interfere with the constitution was confined to such changes as were necessary to the perfect accomplishment of secession." Fleming says "Foreseeing war, Watts proposed that the general assembly be given power to confiscate the property of alien enemies, and also to suspend the collection of debts due to alien enemies." In 1861 he received a flattering vote for governor, but was defeated by John Gill Shorter. Upon the opening of hostilities he organized the 17th Alabama infantry regiment, C. S. Army, and became its colonel. He saw service with this organization at Pensacola, Fla., and Corinth, Miss., while in command of his regiment at Corinth, President Davis selected him as attorney-general for the Confederate government. This honor was wholly unsolicited on his part. However, he immediately resigned his command and proceeded to Richmond, where he took the oath of office on April 9, 1862. Against his wishes he was elected governor of Alabama in August, 1862, filling this position from December, 1863, to the spring of 1865, the most trying period through which the State has ever passed. It was during his term that the clash between the state militia and conscription officers occurred, and the meeting of southern governors to remonstrate against the Confederate government's restriction of trade was held. In the spring of 1865, Governor Watts, calling on the people to renew their efforts against the invader, said in the New York Times, April 4, 1865, "we hold more territory than a year ago, more of Texas, Louisiana, and Arkansas. Georgia is overrun but is ready to rise. Our financial condition is better than four years ago. Arms, commissary and quartermaster's stores are more abundant now." Soon after the collapse of the Confederate government, Governors Shorter and Watts were taken prisoners and confined in northern prisons. Upon his return to Alabama he opened law offices in Montgomery. He had formerly been associated in the practice with Jefferson F. Jackson, afterwards U. S. district attorney for the southern district, Thomas J. Judge and D. S. Troy. Before the war he had accumulated a comfortable fortune, but with the cessation of hostilities the Federal troops destroyed all his property, and he was left a poor man, having to begin again to build up his property. In June, 1872, he was one of the counsel for the defense in the case of the United States vs. Smith, Pyland and Bozeman, one of the Ku Klux cases. His speech before the jury was considered to be the cause of the mistrial. Governor Watts never held office again with the exception of 1880-81, when he represented Montgomery County in the legislature. However he never ceased to be active in politics. In 1868, upon his pardon by President Johnson, he supported Seymour and Blair. In 1872 he urged the people to support Horace Greeley, because of his considerate treatment of President Davis. He supported Tilden for the presidency in 1876; Hancock in 1880; and Cleveland in 1884, 1888 and 1892. He was in 1889-90 president of the Alabama bar association. He was formerly a Whig, but from 1868 acted with the Democratic party. He was a prominent member of the Baptist church and contributed very liberally of his means to its support. Married: (1) January 10, 1842, to Eliza B. Allen, of Montgomery, daughter of Wade and Eliza (Sayre) Allen (q. v.); (2) September, 1875, to Mrs. Ellen (Noyes) Jackson, widow of one of his former partners, Jefferson F. Jackson. Children: by first wife, 1. John Wade (q. v.), m. Nannie Ross Sanders; 2. Thomas Henry (q. v.), m. Johness Bealle Eddins; 3. Florence, m. Col. Daniel S. Troy (q. v.); 4. Catherine, m. Capt. Robert Collins; 5. Alice, m. Alex Troy (q. v.); 6. Minnie Garrett, unm. Last residence: Montgomery.

WEAKLEY, DAVID MORRIS, teacher, was born June 12, 1878, at Newbern, Tenn.; son of M. H. P. and Mary Ann (Morris) Weakley, the former who was a farmer and served in the C. S. Army; grandson of Capt. William Morris of Rector, Ark. The Weakleys were pioneer settlers in Tennessee, Weakley County having been named in honor of their ancestors. David M. Weakley received his education in the Newbern male and female seminary, taking special courses in bookkeeping, manual and industrial training. During his boyhood he engaged in farming but later became teacher of manual training at the Tennessee industrial school, 1898-1905, and the work exhibited by his classes in manual training won a medal at the St. Louis exposition. In January, 1905, he was appointed superintendent of the Alabama boys' industrial school. He is a Democrat; a Mason; and is a member of the National conference social work; the Southern sociological congress; the Alabama sociological association; the Birmingham social workers; and a member of the Methodist church. Married: in 1902, at Nashville, Tenn., to Katherine Lorraine Stamps, daughter of Prof. J. T. Stamps, of Columbia, Tenn. Children: 1. Katherine; 2. David Morris, jr.; 3. Elizabeth. Residence: Birmingham.

WEAKLEY, JAMES HARVEY, surveyor-general of Alabama, was born in 1798 in Halifax County, Va., and died in 1856, in New Orleans; eldest son of Samuel and Sarah (Vaughn) Weakley, of Halifax County, who removed to Tennessee in 1799; grandson of William Vaughn, and wife, a Miss Barksdale, of Halifax, and of Capt. Robert Weakley and wife, who was a Miss McCarthy, the former a Revolutionary soldier, in Halifax, Va., whose second wife was Jane Locke, of Salisbury, N. C.; brother of Gen. Samuel Davies Weakley (q. v.). The first American ancestor of this branch of the Weakley family was from Devonshire, England, who settled in Cumberland County, Pa., about 1735. He was educated at the Cumberland university; studied surveying under his father, who laid off Nashville and was one of its settlers. In 1817, Judge Weakley was appointed by Gen. John Coffee, surveyor of public lands in Alabama and took up his residence at Huntsville, where he served under Gen. Coffee until the death of the latter, after which Pres. Andrew Jackson appointed him to the office of surveyor-general. This office was abolished in 1851, and he removed to New Orleans where he engaged in the cotton business until his death. He was a Democrat; and an Episcopalian. Married: in 1830 at Huntsville, to Ellen M. Donegan, a native of Ireland, who after Judge Weakley's death, entered the convent of St. Cecilia, at Nashville. No children. Last residence: New Orleans.

WEAKLEY, JOHN BEDFORD, Jr., lawyer, was born November 6, 1863, at Florence; son of John Bedford and Mary E. (Rice) Weakley, of that place; grandson of Gen. Samuel Davies Weakley (q. v.). He completed his course of studies at the State normal college, Florence; read law in the office of Judge R. T. Simpson; was admitted to the bar, September 12, 1884, and practiced in his native county until 1902 at which time he located in Birmingham. He was elected mayor of Florence, 1907, and served two years; represented Lauderdale County in the constitutional convention of 1901 and was chairman of the committee on municipal corporation of that body. He was a member of the board of education of Florence city schools and formed this organization, and of the board of trustees of the State normal college. His interest in education prompted his activities on behalf of the up-building of branch libraries in the Birmingham district. He was a member of the State legislature from Jefferson county, 1915. Author: City code of Florence; City code of Birmingham; Local law of Birmingham; numerous papers prepared and read before national bodies studying municipal questions. Married: June 30, 1891, to Anne, daughter of Gen. John D. and Letitia (Pearsall) Rather (q. v.). Residence: Birmingham.

WEAKLEY, SAMUEL DAVIES, manufacturer, was born October 2, 1812, in Davidson County, Tenn., near Nashville, and died February 3, 1897, in Florence; son of Samuel and Sarah (Vaughn) Weakley; brother of James Harvey Weakley (q. v.) and nephew of Mary (Weakley) Braham. Gen. Weakley was educated in Nashville, trained as a surveyor by his father and joined his brother, James Harvey, at Florence in 1831, as assistant surveyor of public lands. In 1848, with James Martin and others, he bought the Cypress Creek cotton mills, reorganized them, and by 1861 they had brought great wealth to the owners. During the War of Secession these mills with four thousand bales of cotton, were burned by the Federals. He was a director of the Memphis and Charleston railroad and influenced its extension into Florence; was one of the original board of directors of the Florence Wesleyan university, now the State normal.

He assisted in building and maintaining the Florence synodical college, of which he was a trustee; organizer and first president of the Florence insurance and banking company. During the War of Secession he was major general of militia. He was a Whig, and afterward a Democrat; a Mason; and an Episcopalian. Married: June 30, 1836, to Eliza, daughter of Dr. John Robertson and Isabella Matilda (Smith) Bedford, the former one of the four original settlers of Florence and the first physician of Lauderdale County, son of Thomas Bedford, a Revolutionary officer and member of Lunenburg County, Va., committee of safety. Her great-grandfather was Joseph Dickson, a Revolutionary officer and a member of congress, 1788 to 1795, from Lincoln County, N. C., who removed to Rutherford County, Tenn., 1803, and died 1825. Children: six daughters and one son, 1. John Bedford, married Mary E. Rice of Morgan County; 2. Kate E., m. — Moore; 3. Narcissa, m. — Milliken; 4. Jem H., unmarried. Last residence: Florence.

WEAKLEY, SAMUEL DAVIES, lawyer and chief justice supreme court, was born July 16, 1860, at Somerville, Morgan County; son of John Bedford and Mary Emily (Rice) Weakley, the former a captain in the Confederate Army, and a merchant of Florence; grandson of Gen. Samuel Davies and Eliza (Bedford) Weakley (q. v.); and of Judge Green P. and Anna (Turner) Rice (q. v.); brother of John B. Weakley (q. v.). He entered a preparatory school for boys at Florence in 1867, and graduated at the State normal school, June 19, 1879; taught school at Center Star, Lauderdale County, July 1, to October 1, 1879; read law in the office of Judge W. J. Wood of Florence, and Judge R. T. Simpson (q. v.). He was admitted to the bar on May 17, 1880, and in September, 1880, located in Memphis, Tenn., where he was appointed assistant attorney general of Shelby County, Tenn., a position which he held four years, after which time he entered the general practice at Memphis, remaining there until February, 1887, when he removed to Birmingham; became a member of the firm of Gregg and Weakley, 1887-89; was associated with E. H. Cabiness from 1889 until 1906, when he was appointed chief justice of the supreme court of Alabama by Governor W. D. Jelks. At the end of his term in November, 1906, he returned to the general practice entering into partnership with his brother, J. B. Weakley. From March, 1907, until February, 1914, he represented Alabama in litigation over freight and passenger rate reduction, vigorously prosecuting this work for seven years and to a successful conclusion. In 1889, while city attorney of Birmingham, he compiled the Code of City ordinances. He was author of the first Statewide prohibition bill in 1907, and later prepared the Carmichael and Fuller bills and drafted the proposed constitutional amendment which was defeated in 1909. He is a member of the American and Alabama bar associations and was a delegate to the congress of lawyers and jurists, at St. Louis, 1904. He served as second lieutenant of the "Porter Guards" of Memphis, Tenn., 1881-83, and was captain of Company K, 2nd Alabama infantry regiment, State troops, 1888-90. He is a Democrat; a Presbyterian; and Woodman of the World. Married: February 27, 1884, at Birmingham, Ellen, daughter of Dr. Thomas Newton and Lucy (Leeper) Anglin (q. v.). Children: 1. Eula Josephine; 2. Louise. Residence: Birmingham.

WEAR, F. L., Presbyterian minister; living 1913. Residence: Huntsville.

WEATHERFORD, WILLIAM, Indian chief and planter, was born near Coosada, in 1765, and died March 4, 1824, on his plantation in Baldwin County; son of Charles and Sehoy (McGillivray) Weatherford, the former a Scotch trader who came from Georgia and established himself on the bank of the Alabama River, built a store and constructed a race-track, and brought blooded horses into the Indian country, the latter who, prior to her marriage to Mr. Weatherford, was first married to Col. Tait, a British officer at Fort Toulouse; grandson of a Tuckabatchee chief and Sehoy Marchand, who lived at the Holy Ground, the latter who afterward married Lochlan McGillivray, a Scotch adventurer and trader to whom she bore three children, Alexander McGillivray, who became a great chief, a daughter who married LeClere Milfort, a French officer, who resided in the Indian nation twenty years as a war chief and on the death of his wife returned to Paris and became a brigade general under Napoleon, and another daughter who married Benjamin Durant, a Huguenot trader from South Carolina, and became the common mother of the family of that name in Baldwin which gave the name to Durant's Bend in Dallas County; great-grandson of Capt. Marchand, a French officer in command of Fort Toulouse on the Coosa and Tallapoosa Rivers, who was murdered at the fort in 1822 by his mutinous men, and his Indian wife, Sehoy, a Muscogee princess of the noble tribe of the Wind. The Cornells, Taits, Baileys, Moniacs, Tunstalls, Durants and Weatherfords are all connected by ties of consanguinity. Opothleyoholo was a Cornell. William Weatherford cared little for education, refusing to learn to read or write, yet he acquired a good knowledge of the English language. He was a proficient horseman and athlete, and gained great influence among the Indians by his eloquent speeches and his wild life. He established a large plantation on the Alabama River, in what is now Lowndes County. Influenced by the talents and prowess of Tecumseh, he became convinced of the necessity of checking the encroachments of the whites. He went to consult his brothers on Little River as to his course, and was dissuaded by them from countenancing the Indian war, but when he returned to his home, the war party had been to his plantation, had taken his negroes and stock to the Hickory Ground, and threatened to retain them and kill him if he joined the peace party. He entered into their scheme and took part in the massacre of Fort Mims, leading the Indian forces to the assault. He was unremitting in his efforts to make the attack a victory, but tried in vain to prevent the subsequent butchery. On his return from that expedition, he was made "tustenuggee," or war chief, of the tribe. During the various engagements of the war, among them those of Talladega, Hillabee, the Holy Ground, and of Tohopeka or the Horse Shoe, called Weatherford's "Thirty Battles," some four thousand warriors were killed. He led his men in the fight at Econachaca and when they fled, made his famous plunge from a bluff ten or fifteen feet in height into the Alabama River, and escaped. After the battle of Tohopeka, "Red eagle," as Weatherford was known, went to Jackson's tent and surrendered himself, demanding that the Indian women and children be brought in from the woods and protected. Because of his courage, Gen. Jackson protected him from the infuriated relatives of the victims of Fort Mims and treated him with courtesy. He was with Jackson for a year at the Hermitage, then returned to Monroe County, collected the remains of his former wealth, and moved with his family to Little River, where in a civilized home, he remained as a peaceful farmer until his death. Married: (1) to May Moniac, daughter of Sam Moniac, who was an Indian half-breed, and lived at the Holy Ground; (2) to May Stiggins. Among his children was: Charles, b. 1800, deceased, m. Elizabeth Stiggins, children, Charles, William and Elizabeth. He has descendants in Baldwin and Monroe Counties. Last residence: Baldwin County.

WEATHERLY, CHARLES TALIAFERRO, physician, was born in 1852, near Atlanta, Ga.; son of Dr. Job Sobieski and Eliza Gilmer (Taliaferro) Weatherly (q. v.), and brother of James Meriwether Weatherly (q. v.). He received his early education at Montgomery, and was graduated from the University of the South at Sewanee, Tenn., in 1870. He read medicine with his father and in 1871 and 1872 attended Louisville medical college, in 1873 went to Charleston medical college, and in 1874 was graduated from Atlanta medical college. He practiced with his father for two years, then went to South Carolina, where he practiced for seven years. After that he returned to Benton, where he has continued his profession. He is a member of the Medical Association of the State of Alabama; of the Lowndes County Medical Society; and of the board of censors. He is a Protestant Episcopalian. Residence: Benton.

WEATHERLY, JAMES MERIWETHER, lawyer, was born July 5, 1856, near Palmetto, Coweta County, Ga.; son of Job Sobieski and Eliza (Gilmer) Weatherly (q. v.); and brother of Dr. Charles Taliaferro Weatherly (q. v.). He attended the common schools of Montgomery until he was fourteen years old; was a student at the University of the South, Sewanee, Tenn., in 1871; and was graduated from the University of Alabama, LL. B., in 1879. For several years before he began the study of law, he engaged in commercial pursuits and taught school in Montgomery. He practiced law in Montgomery for a year in the office with Clifton, Herbert & Chambers, and in November, 1882, moved to Birmingham and was associated with H. A. Sharp until 1885, when Mr. Sharp was elected to the bench. He became a member of the firm of Weatherly & Putman, and later of the firm of Weatherly, Underwood & Thach. He was a member of the constitutional convention of 1901 from Jefferson County; was attorney for the Southern Railway, the Southern Bell Telephone & Telegraph Company, the Birmingham Terminal Company, and of the Maryland Casualty Company; has been one of three commissioners of the city of Birmingham by appointment of Gov. O'Neal since April 10, 1911, being the first commissioner under the commission form of government in Alabama; and devotes his time exclusively to city business. He is a member of the Alabama Bar Association, is a Democrat, and an Episcopalian. Married: December 13, 1882, to Florence Milner of Birmingham, daughter of Col. John T. Milner of New Castle. Children: four. Residence: Birmingham.

WEATHERLY, JOB SOBIESKI, physician, was born July 8, 1828, at Bennettsville, Marlborough County, S. C., and died in 1891; son of Job Weatherly, a native of Maryland, of English descent, who settled in South Carolina during the Revolutionary War. His grandparents on the maternal side, the McRaes, emigrated from Scotland to South Carolina, his mother's father serving in Marion's division during the Revolutionary War. He was a brother of Thomas Christopher Weatherly, of South Carolina, who served in both houses of the legislature of that state. Dr. Weatherly attended the Bennettsville high school, Marlborough County, S. C., and began the study of medicine under Dr. Alexander McLeod, at Bennettsville. After two years of study, he went to New York, where for two years he was a private pupil of Dr. P. A. Aylett and a student in the medical department of the University of New York. He was graduated from that institution in 1849, and in 1851 began the practice of medicine in Adairsville, Ga. In August, 1851, he moved to Palmetto, Coweta County, Ga., and in January, 1857, to Montgomery. He continued to practice his profession at the latter place for the remainder of his life. In 1862, Dr. Weatherly was placed in charge of the hospital for the sick and wounded soldiers at Shiloh, and on his return to Montgomery, was appointed medical purveyor of the department of the Mississippi. Shortly afterward, he was ordered to Savannah, but soon resigned because of illness in his family. He returned to Montgomery, declined an appointment in the hospitals there, and devoted himself to his private practice for the remainder of the War of Secession. He was one of the organizers of the Montgomery Medical and Surgical Society in 1866, and later served as president of the society for three terms; was active in reorganizing, in 1867, the Medical Association of the State of Alabama, which had been suspended during the War of Secession; was first vice president of that association, later was orator and in 1875 president; was a member of the board of censors and of the state board of health, established under the auspices of the state medical association; and was president of the board of health of Montgomery. Dr. Weatherly, with Drs. Gaston and Michel, was mainly instrumental in securing the passage through the legislature of the bills establishing the state board of health, regulating the practice of medicine in the state and securing the necessary appropriation. In 1868, at the first annual meeting of the American Medical Association after the War of Secession at which the southern delegates were present, Dr. Baldwin and Dr. Weatherly were delegates from the Montgomery Medical and Surgical Society, and the latter was placed on the nominating committee. He nominated Dr. Baldwin for president of the organization, and led the contest which ended in a final unanimous ballot for Dr. Baldwin. In 1870, the same association elected Dr. Weatherly first vice-president, although he was not present at the time. In May, 1871, he attended the meeting of the American Medical Association in San Francisco, and was elected first president of the Rocky Mountain Medical Association formed by members of the National Medical Association in San Francisco. He was an honorary member of the California State Medical Society and of the Gynecological Society of Boston, and was an Episcopalian. He was author of articles on "Glossitis," 1853; "Puerperal Convulsions," 1857; "An Operation for Polypoid Tumor of the Uterus," and "Diabetes and its Treatment," both published in New Orleans Journal of Medicine; "The Opium Habit," Transactions of the Medical Association of Alabama; "Woman, Her Rights and Wrongs," an oration before the Medical Association of Alabama; "Medical Education," a report as chairman of the committee of the American Medical Association; "Hemorrhagic Malarial Fever"; "Anatomy and Diseases of the Cervix Uteri"; "Syphilis and its Prevention by State Action"; and "Quarantine against Yellow Fever," 1878. Married: in September, 1852, to Eliza Gilmer Talliaferro, daughter of Col. G. B. Talliaferro and a grand-niece of Gov. Gilmer of Georgia. Children: 1. Charles Talliaferro (q. v.); 2. James Meriwether (q. v.); 3. Gilmer; 4. Thaddeus; 5. William; 6. George. Last residence: Montgomery.

WEATHERS, BENJAMIN FRANKLIN, planter, was born November 8, 1839, at Fayetteville, Fayette County, Ga.; son of Isham Thomas and Sarah Ann (Thompson) Weathers, the former who was a native of Rutherford, N. C., removed to Wilkes County, Ga.; in 1842 removed to Randolph County, Ga., was a member of Capt. John D. Stell's company, and fought under Gen. Winfield Scott, in the Seminole War, 1836; grandson of Isham and Mary (Weathers) Weathers, and of Jeremiah and Elizabeth Thompson; great-grandson of John and William Weathers, brothers, who were soldiers in the American Revolution. His ancestors were English and Scotch immigrants who settled in North Carolina. B. F. Weathers was educated in the public schools of his county; taught school in 1865; located in Roanoke in 1866; engaged in the mercantile business; in 1873, turned his attention to farming and milling; and later resumed his farming interests.

In 1868 he was elected justice of the peace, served for eight years; was elected to the constitutional convention as a delegate from Randolph County, 1875; from 1880 to 1886 was in the probate judge's office; in 1888 was nominated as Democratic candidate for the State senate from his county, but declined; but was a member of the State senate in 1915. He was commissioned second lieutenant of the Dowdell Rangers raised in Randolph County, August 12, 1861; was promoted captain by Gen. Bragg for gallantry at Shiloh in 1862; was captured in the first charge on the breastworks at the battle of Franklin, November 30, 1864, and sent as prisoner to Johnson's Island, where he was held until June, 1865. He is a Democrat, has served as chairman of the executive committee of Randolph County; and has been a Mason for over fifty years. Married: on January 6, 1867, in Troup County, Ga., to Lavice Jane, daughter of William D. and Mary (Smith) Mickle, residents of the vicinity of Roanoke and of Irish descent. Children: 1. Mary Eva, m. James Ragin Simms, Opelika; William Mickle, m. Sarah Irene De Laney, d.; 3. Sarah Eppie, m. Wade Wood, Birmingham. Residence: Roanoke.

WEAVER, JAMES H., secretary of the State, 1856-60, was born in Georgia, but removed to Coosa County at an early age. He served a term as sheriff of his county; was elected to the house of representatives, 1853; and served as secretary of the State, 1856-60.

WEAVER, PHILIP J., merchant, was born June 22, 1797, in Mifflintown, Juniata County, Pa., and died November 10, 1865, in Selma. He was of German parentage, his father and mother being natives of the Palatinate on the Rhine River. He received a limited education, and was first employed by a mercantile firm in Baltimore to learn the business. He went to Alabama about 1815, to clerk in a mercantile firm in Cahaba, and later became junior partner and finally sole proprietor of the firm. In 1818 he moved the business to Cahaba Falls, now Centerville, and after a brief period to Maplesville. In 1820 he located at Moore's Bluff, now Selma, bought Moore's log house, the only building on the bluff, and filled it with Indian goods. In 1824 he built a large warehouse and, blasting out the rock, made a way to the water, where he constructed a wharf. Then, in connection with his warehouse, he ran keel boats from Mobile. As his business with the settlers and Indians increased, he enlarged his store, and in 1830, opened a branch house at Pontotoc, Miss., Chickasaw Nation. He carried on land speculations and a large planting interest in addition to his mercantile business in Selma, until his store was destroyed by Gen. Wilson's army, April 2, 1865. He had taken great interest in and had contributed largely to the construction of the Alabama & Tennessee Rivers Railroad, and the Alabama & Mississippi Rivers Railroad. He died November 10, 1865, from the effects of a blow on the back of his head received from one of Wilson's raiders. Married: May 8, 1823, to Anne P. Gardner. Children: 1. Philip John, deceased; 2. WEBB, FRANK BELL, Presbyterian minister, was born November 5, 1848, at Eutaw, Green County; son of William Peter and Martha Burwell (Bell) Webb, the former a native of Lincoln County, N. C., a lawyer, who came to Alabama and settled in Greensboro, moved to Eutaw in 1839, and practiced his profession there until his death in 1890; grandson of

Judge Henry Young and Elizabeth (Forney) Webb, who lived at Mount Welcome, Lincoln County, N. C., the former who was a native of that state, was appointed by President Monroe to be judge of the U. S. district court from the territory of Alabama, went to Alabama in 1818, and held the first court at Neighbors Cross Roads, was elected one of the circuit judges by the first legislature of Alabama, and held that office at the time of his death in 1823, and of John and Elizabeth Randolph (Bacon) Bell, natives of Virginia, who lived at Greensboro. The Webb family was originally from Dorsetshire, Wales, and it held an honorable position at the time Katherine Parr was regent of England, as far back as 1544. The earliest history that is known of the family runs back to Henry Webb, who was born in Warwickshire, England, 1357. Mr. Webb received his early education at Eutaw, at Hatfield academy, and at Pleasant Ridge academy. He entered the University of Mississippi in January, 1866, and two years later entered Washington and Lee university, from where he was graduated in March, 1869. He attended the Union theological seminary at Hampden Sidney, Va., and after a three years' course, was graduated, B. D., 1872. He was ordained as a minister of the gospel of the Presbyterian church, December 1, 1872, and was installed by the Presbytery of Alabama as pastor of the Union Springs church. He remained in that charge for fifteen years; held the pastorate of the Third Presbyterian church of Birmingham for a year; and of the First Presbyterian church of Columbia, Tenn., for twelve years and a half; moved to Talladega in July, 1902, to become president of the Isbell female college; took charge of the First Presbyterian church of Talladega in January, 1902, in connection with the college work; and at the end of two years resigned from the college work and continued in charge of the church. He was a director on the board of the Columbia theological seminary, South Carolina, for four years as a representative from the Synod of Alabama; was for five years at one time and four years at another the chairman of the executive committee of the Synod's Orphans' Home; was a member of the executive committee of foreign missions of general assembly for seven years; was moderator of the Synod of Alabama in 1881, 1905 and 1911; was moderator of the Synod of Nashville, Tenn., in 1890; has served as a member of the board of trustees of the Synodical college for Women; was made president of the first State temperance convention, held at Athens, April, 1881; and was appointed delegate to the second World's Christian Citizenship Conference, 1913. The degree of D. D. was conferred upon Dr. Webb by one of the institutions of learning in North Carolina. He is a Knight of Pythias and for two years held office as district deputy grand chancellor; served for two years as grand chief templar of the Order of Good Templars in Alabama; and is a member of Sigma Alpha Epsilon college fraternity. He was editor of the Orphan's Home Monthly, published by the Synod of Alabama in connection with its orphanage work. Married: October 30, 1872, at Lexington, Va., to Mary White Paxton, daughter of Maj. James Gardner and Annie Maria (White) Paxton, of that place, granddaughter of Matthew and Mary White, the former a native of Ireland and the latter of Augusta County, Va., and of Elisha and Margaret (McNutt) Paxton, who lived on a landed estate along the James River Valley of Virginia. The Paxtons are descended from a soldier of Cromwell who emigrated with his comrades to the north of Ireland, and later came to America. Children: 1. James Gardner Paxton, d. July 8, 1902, m. Mary B. Abernathy of Leighton, who lives with her son, Frank Bell, in Tuscaloosa; 2. Martha Bell, m. Mr. Morris, McComb, Miss.; 3. Frank Bell, d. January 22, 1887, at Union Springs; 4. C.; son of John and Lucretia (Smith) Webb, the former a native of Virginia, soldier in the War of 1812, the latter a North Carolinian. He came to Alabama with his mother when seven years of age and received his education at Mardisville academy. Having lost his father while but a youth he worked at a number of jobs to aid his widowed mother, farm hand, merchant's clerk, and brick mason, becoming an expert in the latter vocation, and assisting in erecting some of the handsomest public and private buildings of that period, including the old Brist Baptist church of Montgomery. In 1862, he entered the Confederate Army as second lieutenant, Co. F, 13th Alabama infantry regiment, and rose to the rank of captain, taking part in the battle of Tazewell, Tenn., and in the Kentucky campaign with General Bragg. His regiment was ordered by Gen. Stephen D. Lee, to hold Grant back until Pemberton's army could be saved, during the fight at Baker's Creek. Later he took part in the defense of Vicksburg, and was wounded in both thigh and knee, being captured, July 4th, 1863, at Vicksburg, but soon afterwards paroled. After the promotion of Col. E. W. Pettus to the rank of brigadier-general, Captain Webb was made ordnance officer on his staff. He fought in the battles around Chattanooga, at Dalton, and Atlanta, Ga., and under Hood in Tennessee. He was at Columbia, S. C., when that city was shelled by the Federal troops, and at Charlotte, Salisbury, Goldsboro and Bentonville. In 1888 he was elected to the Alabama legislature, to represent Talladega County, and re-elected in 1890, and was the author of the bill providing for the care of Confederate soldiers, their widows and orphans. He also passed a bill to prohibit pools, trusts, &c, in Alabama. He was a Democrat; Methodist; Mason; Odd Fellow; and Knight of Honor. Married: (1) September 11, 1851, to P. M. Washington. He was with the American army at Yorktown, and witnessed the surrender of Cornwallis. In 1817

he came to Alabama and during the last ten years of his life he lived in Tuscaloosa with his son, John J. Webster. He died in Tuscaloosa, September 6, 1839, in the 97th year of his age.—Flag of the Union, Tuscaloosa, Ala., September 14, 1839.

WEEDEN, HOWARD, artist and author, was born July 6, 1847, in Huntsville, and died April 11, 1905, in Huntsville; daughter of William and Jane E. (Urquhart) Weeden, natives of Maryland and Georgia, respectively; sister of William Weeden, a captain in the C. S. Army, who served as solicitor of Madison County, 1870-1873, and died February 13, 1889, and of Col. John David Weeden (q. v.). Her father's family were large cotton planters and slave owners, and on her mother's side she inherited her literary talent through a line of Scotch ancestry with a notable taste for letters. Her early life was spent on a cotton plantation, and from the associations formed there she gained the knowledge of the plantation life and characteristics of the negro race which illustrates her talents both as an author and an artist. She was educated as a gentlewoman of the time, and received some small training in painting. That, supplemented by a few lessons on visits to New Orleans, was the sum of her technical instruction. She painted in her Huntsville home in oil and water colors, and while attending the Columbian Exposition in 1893, discovered the sketches of negroes by Frost, Kemble and others. In those she saw nothing of the "old-time 'quality' negro of the South," and on her return home made a study in oil of "Uncle Champ," an old family servant, and to accompany it wrote the verses, "Massa o' de Sheep Ford." She submitted a sheaf of verses and sketches to publishers in New York, and the work was accepted at once with a request for more. The result of that request was her first book, "Shadows on the Wall," 1898. In the years following she produced "Bandana Ballads," 1899; "Songs of the Old South," 1901; and "Old Voices," 1904. Those volumes, composed of portraits of fine old negroes with a bit of verse opposite, comprise her entire work. Last residence: Huntsville.

WEEDEN, JOHN DAVID, lawyer, was born July 27, 1840, at Huntsville, and died November 16, 1908, at Huntsville; son of William and Jane E. (Urquhart) Weeden, natives respectively of Baltimore, Md., and of Georgia, the former, who lived in Baltimore until manhood, who was colonel of a regiment in the War of 1812, came to Alabama in 1823, moved to Huntsville, was an extensive planter, owning large plantations in Marengo, Sumter, Madison and Marshall Counties, and died in 1850 at Huntsville; grandson of Col. William and Sarah (Sands) Weeden, who lived in Baltimore, Md., and of David and Katherine B. (McGehee) Urquhart, of Augusta, Ga., the former a native of Cromarty, Scotland; born in 1779, the latter a descendant of Lord Brooks, who came to Virginia in 1660; great-grandson of George Weeden, born in 1730 in Fredericksburg, Va., died there in November, 1793, who offered his services to Washington in 1775, was assigned to the Third Virginia regiment, and after the battle of Brandywine, was made brigadier general in charge of the brigade which under his command was principally instrumental in the capture of the Hessians at Trenton; brother of Howard Weeden (q. v.). The earliest mention of the name of Weeden in Virginia history is found in 1650, when George Weeden came with Sir Thomas Lunsford, baronet, and settled on the south side of the Rappahannock River. Col. Weeden was reared in Huntsville and attended the Green academy. He graduated from the University of Alabama, A. B., 1859, and received the degree of A. M. from that institution in 1884. After leaving college he read law under Chancellor Keyes at Montgomery, and in 1860 was admitted to the bar by the supreme court of the state. Returning to Huntsville, he practiced law until early in 1861, when he entered the C. S. Army as lieutenant of Co. K, Ninth Alabama infantry regiment. He was transferred to the Forty-ninth Alabama, and promoted to major in May, 1862; was made lieutenant colonel in August, 1863; and commanded his regiment until the second day's battle of Nashville, December 16, 1864, when he was wounded and captured. He was sent to prison at Johnson's Island, and was not released until July 30, 1865. After the war, he returned to Huntsville and resumed the practice of law. He served as a trustee of the University of Alabama, 1882-1885; became professor of law at the university in 1885, and resigned from that position in 1888 to resume the practice of law in Florence, where he lived until his death. He was appointed justice of the peace and notary public by the governor of the state; assisted in the organization of Camp O'Neal No. 298 United Confederate Veterans, of which he was first lieutenant commander, and was re-elected annually until his death. He was a Democrat, a Presbyterian and a Mason. Married: September 23, 1869, at Sweet Water, near Florence, to Mattie Hays Patton, daughter of Robert M. and Jane Locke (Braham) Patton (q. v.), of that place, the former a wealthy planter of Lauderdale County, a merchant, State senator, and the first elected governor of Alabama after the War of Secession; granddaughter of Gen. John Braham, whose father came from England. Children: 1. Janie Braham, m. B. H. Wilkins, d. in 1900; 2. Robert Patton, m. Martha Beesley; 3. Mary Urquhart, m. Erister Ashcroft, d. in 1908; 4. was brought to St. Augustine a captive. Dr. Weedon's mother was the daughter of a wealthy planter who lived near Huntsville, and his paternal grandfather was a Virginian, who was an officer in the Revolutionary Army. During his infancy he was taken from Tallahassee, Fla., to St. Augustine, and lived there until he was eighteen years old. He went to New York and entered the office of Dr. James H. Armesby, professor of anatomy in the medical college of that city. In 1855, he received the degree of M. D., and was appointed resident surgeon of the city hospital, and served one year as surgeon to the city dispensary in Albany. He spent some time in Dry Tortugas, Fla., in 1857, for his health, and on the outbreak of the yellow fever epidemic at Key West, went to that place and offered his services. He served in the U. S. marine hospital and as health officer of the port of Key West for several years. At the beginning of the War of Secession, he resigned his position as port physician, and went to Tallahassee, where he entered the C. S. Army as a private in an artillery company. Soon afterward he was made assistant surgeon of the Fourth Florida regiment, and two months later was made surgeon. He served through nearly all of the campaigns of the west under Bragg and Johnston, and became brigade surgeon under Gen. William Preston just before the battle of Murfreesboro. Soon after the battle of Chickamauga he became chief surgeon of Gen. Breckenridge's division; and on the retirement of Gen. Breckenridge served as chief surgeon with Gen. William B. Bate until just before the fall of Atlanta, when he was relieved from field duty and sent to post duty at Eufaula. Just before Lee's surrender, and when Johnston's army was in North Carolina, he was ordered to rejoin that army, but the war ended before he reached it. He was paroled at Macon, Ga., and returned at once to Key West, where he reentered the practice of medicine. After many years of active practice, he retired and associated himself with George H. Dent in the drug business, under the firm name of Weedon & Dent. Married: in 1865, in Eufaula, to Mary Elizabeth Christin Young, who died in 1891, daughter of E. B. Young, a merchant of Eufaula. WESTBROOK, J. C., business man, was born August 25, 1819, in Sampson County, N. C., deceased. His father was a farmer who moved with his family southward in search of better land in 1827, and located in Fayette County, Ga., where six years later he died. He received a limited education in the common schools of the country, and after his father's death, took charge of the farm. During the latter part of the Creek War, in 1838, he enlisted in the U. S. Army, and was sent to Fort Scudder, Cherokee County, Ga., where the troops were disbanded. In 1839 he was employed by a clock manufacturer as traveling agent, and in the fall of 1840 emigrated to Tallapoosa County, where he opened a farm, established a grist and saw mill, run by water power, and carried on a mercantile business on a small scale. He moved to Birmingham in 1883, where for ten years he had been a dealer in real estate, and entered more largely into the business of buying and selling land. In addition to his real estate operations, he engaged in mercantile business in the produce line, and was a practical coal miner. He was president of the Western Valley Street Railway, and a director in the Birmingham Agricultural Works. Married: in November, 1840, to Elizabeth A. Lambert, of Tallapoosa County, whose family had come to Alabama in that year. Children: four daughters, who all were married, and one son, deceased. Last residence: Birmingham.

WESTCOTT, CHARLES RUSSELL, business man, was born February 5, 1863, in Montgomery, and died June 5, 1906, in the same city; son of William R. and Mary A. W. (Russell) Westcott, of Montgomery. He was educated in the schools of Montgomery and graduated, A. B., from the University of Alabama, in 1884. For a few years he was a traveling salesman and in 1889 entered the grocery business which he continued until his death. He was a Mason. Married: to Jeanetta B., daughter of Sven J. and Margaret H. (O'Neal) Anderson (q. v.). Children: 1. William; 2. Jeanetta; 3. John; 4.

Mary Russell; 5. Leona. Last residence: Montgomery.

WESTMORELAND, THEOPHILUS, physician, was born November 21, 1834, in Giles County, Tenn., deceased. He was educated primarily at Pulaski, Tenn., and was graduated in medicine at Nashville, Tenn., in 1855. Immediately after leaving college he began to practice medicine in Giles County. Later he located in Pulaski for a few years, and in 1879 settled at Athens. In 1880 he established a drug store in connection with his practice. In addition to his profession he engaged in farming, and served one term as mayor of Athens. During the War of Secession he went into the C. S. Army as surgeon of the Forty-third Tennessee infantry regiment, 1861, and afterwards was made chief surgeon of Gen. Quarles's brigade, in which position he served until the close of the war. He was captured at Fort Donelson, and with two other physicians, made his escape. He served in the Western army and on duty at Port Hudson, Dalton, and many other places during the war, and, at the time of the surrender, was stationed at Bentonville, N. C. Married: (1) in 1862, at Gilbertsboro, to Eunice Nelson, who died in 1884, daughter of Louis Nelson, a merchant and planter of Gilbertsboro; (2) July 29, 1879, at Athens, to May F. Lane, daughter of Judge George W. Lane of Huntsville, who was for some years judge of the circuit court, and was appointed U. S. district judge by President Buchanan, and was continued in that office by President Lincoln. Children, by first marriage: 1. a daughter, d. in 1884; 2. Mrs. Vandegrift of Athens; 3. Hawkins Davenport, physician, M. D., Vanderbilt university, 1892, interne in a New York hospital, 1892-1894, m. Lucille Cobb Fowkes, residence, Huntsville; by second marriage: 4. Frank Grant; 5. Pattie Lane. Last residence: Athens.

WESTON, ROBERT, soldier of the American Revolution. Robert Weston, a soldier from North Carolina, is buried at "Shady Grove," Sumter County, Ala. His tomb records simply his birth and death and "A Revolutionary Soldier." A few brief facts of his history have been furnished by Mrs. M. C. Carpenter, his granddaughter, of Eutaw, Ala. Robert Weston was born in England, August 29, 1763, and died in Sumter County, Alabama, July 21, 1845, aged 81 years, 5 months and 8 days.

He came to America when a mere lad, with his two brothers, Isaac and Frank Weston. Although very young, he fought in the Revolution in North Carolina; was brave and quick-witted; was captured three times and sentenced to death, but made his escape each time through shrewd ability in disguising himself. He married Mary Ogilvie of South Carolina, who was born June 26, 1769, and died January 11, 1845, aged 75 years 5 months and 15 days. The young couple settled in Fairfield District, S. C., where they resided until their children were grown. They had a large family, and many descendants are still living in South Carolina, Alabama, Mississippi and Texas. One son, I. M. Weston, settled in Columbia, S. C., but the other children all removed to Alabama. Naturally the old couple followed their children and came to Sumter County, Ala., in 1833, where they purchased a home near their children and spent their old age in peace and contentment surrounded by children and grandchildren. Robert Weston was a man of intelligence and excellent education and his grandchildren remember him with the deepest affection and respect. His thrilling stories of Revolutionary times are yet remembered and told in the family.—Mrs. P. H. Mell, in Alabama Historical Society Transactions, vol. iv, pp. 568-569.

WESTON, WASHINGTON, R., business man, was born in Weston, Ga., March 24, 1847; son of Joseph L. and Elizabeth (Rose) Weston, the latter the niece of Howell Rose (q. v.). He left school in 1861 to enlist in the C. S. Army; was soon appointed lieutenant on the staff of Gen. W. H. T. Walker; later he joined Cutts' artillery and because of his youth was detached as mail-carrier for the command. In the Seven Days battle around Richmond he was run over by a caisson and so seriously injured as to cause his discharge from the service. Later, however, he re-enlisted as a private in the 64th Georgia regiment; and in 1864 was captured and sent to Washington, "where he subsequently took the oath of allegiance, and remained at the North until the close of the war." After the close of hostilities he engaged in railroad building, manufacturing, orange-growing, milling and merchandising. In 1886 he removed to Sheffield, where he became one of the incorporators of the Sheffield manufacturing company, serving as secretary, treasurer and business manager; served in the same capacity for the Sheffield ice company; and aided in the development of other industries. He was the first treasurer of the city of Sheffield. He is a Methodist; a Mason and a Knight of Honor. Residence: Sheffield.

WETMORE, THOMAS BADGER, lawyer, was born April 7, 1821, at Newbern, Craven County, N. C., and died March 8, 1894, at Birmingham; son of Ichabod and Elizabeth Ann (Badger) Wetmore, the former a native of Middletown, Middlesex County, Conn., who moved from that place to Newbern, N. C., then to Fayetteville, N. C., and was for many years cashier of the State Bank of North Carolina, at Fayetteville, N. C., the latter a sister of Hon. George E. Badger, a Yale graduate, a lawyer, who was a member of the North Carolina legislature in 1816, was judge of the superior court, 1820-1825, was secretary of the navy under President Harrison, and served two terms as U. S. senator; grandson of Ichabod and Elizabeth (Christophers) Wetmore, of New London, Conn., the former who followed the sea in early life and became master of a merchant vessel, and of Thomas and Lydia (Cogdell) Badger, of Newbern, N. C., the former a native of Windham, Conn., who settled in North Carolina, where he was married; great-grandson of Jeremiah Wetmore, who inherited a large landed property from his father and his grandfather, Rev. Samuel Stow, and of Richard Cogdell, of Newbern, N. C.; great-great-grandson of Israhiah Wetmore, a magistrate of Middletown, Conn., and deputy to the general court, 1721-1728, and of Christopher and Elisabeth (Brewster) Christophers; great-great-great-grandson of Thomas Wetmore, whose name originally was Whitmore, who was born in England in 1615, came to America in 1635, married Sarah, daughter of John and Ann (Willock) Hall, and died December 11, 1681, and of Jonathan Brewster; great-great-great-grandson of Elder William Brewster, of Mayflower fame. Mr. Wetmore received his early schooling at Fayetteville, N. C., and was graduated with distinction from the University of North Carolina, in 1841. He studied law in Fayetteville, N. C., under his uncle, George E. Badger, was admitted to the bar, and began the practice of law in Livingston, about 1844. He practiced law at different times with William H. Green, Robert H. Smith, Joseph G. Baldwin, Edward W. Smith, and Gen. E. W. Pettus. He was justice of the peace of Livingston in 1848 and later in life moved to Birmingham. At the beginning of the War of Secession he volunteered and was stationed at Fort Morgan. By special appointment, he was provost marshal at Selma to the date Selma was taken in 1865. At the close of the war he was corporal of home guards of Selma, and orderly sergeant at the battle of Selma. He was a Democrat; was first an Episcopalian and later a Roman Catholic; was a Mason. Married: December 28, 1864, in Livingston, to Octavia Trueheart Hill, daughter of Gen. James Twyman and Maria Trueheart (Gibbs) Hill, of Livingston; granddaughter of Capt. Ambrose Powell and Frances (Twyman) Hill, who lived at Millwood, a large estate in Culpeper County, Va., the former of whom represented his county for twenty-three consecutive terms in the State legislature, and of Charles Richardson and Mary Garland (Trueheart) Gibbs, of Hanover County, Va.; great-granddaughter of Churchill Gibbs, who joined the Revolutionary Army at the outbreak of war in 1776, and fought through the war then, because of the political action of his brother Zachary, who fought in the British Army, dropped the "e" from his name; great-great-granddaughter of Col. Henry and Anne (Powell) Hill, the former who served more than three years as an officer under Light Horse Harry Lee in the Revolution, and of John Gibbes of Norman blood, who lived in Kent, England; married an Englishwoman named Churchill, and emigrated to Virginia; great-great-great-granddaughter of William Russell and Anne (Towles) Hill. Mrs. Wetmore was a niece of Gen. A. P. Hill, who served with Lee in the War of Secession. Children: 1. Robert Smith, m. Clara Williams; 2. Richmond Pearson, d. January 30, 1912, lawyer, register, Sumter County, 1888, secretary and treasurer, Livingston, 1887-1888, tax commissioner, Jefferson County, 1899-1901, m. Laura Ledelle Lide; 3. James Hill; 4. Laura Holmes, m. Marion Montgomery Stone. Last residence: Birmingham.

WHARTON, HENRY M., author and writer; living in 1913. Residence: Philadelphia, Pa.

WHATLEY, GEORGE CRAGHN, lawyer, member Alabama constitutional convention of 1861, and soldier, was born January 21, 1821, near Cedartown, Ga., and was killed in the battle of Sharpsburg, September 17, 1862, while in command of his regiment; son of Wilson and Sallie (Heard) Whatley, Georgians; grandson of Thomas and Elizabeth (Fitzpatrick) Heard, the former captain of a company raised by Washington for Revolutionary service and known as 'Washington's Own'; great-grandson of Stephen and Mary (Falkner) Heard; great-grand-son of John Heard, Earl of Tyrone, Ireland, who an account of some trouble with the Irish minister emigrated with his five sons, 1719, to Hanover County, Va. The Heards were of English origin, who, for service rendered to Cromwell, received land grants in Ireland. Mr. Whatley was educated in the common schools of Cedartown, Ga., and graduated from the University of Georgia in 1844 with first honors; read law under Judge Thomas A. Walker in Jacksonville, and was admitted to the bar, practicing in all the courts of the state until his death. He served in the State legislature from Calhoun County, 1849; was a member of the constitutional convention of 1861; introduced the first resolutions that led to the secession of the State, and voted for the ordinance of secession. He entered the C. S. Army, February 22, 1861, as first lieutenant, Co. G, 10th Alabama infantry regiment; was promoted captain June 4, 1862; and killed in action, September 17, 1862, at the battle of Sharpsburg. He was a Democrat and Baptist.

WHEELER, JOSEPH, lawyer, planter, author, member of congress, lieutenant-general, C. S. Army, major-general volunteers, U. S. Army, and brigadier general, U. S. Army, was born September 10, 1836, at Augusta, Ga., died January 26, 1906, in Brooklyn, N. Y., and is buried in Arlington cemetery, Washington, D. C.; son of Joseph and Julia Knox (Hull) Wheeler, the former a native of Derby, Conn., planter and banker, who when quite young moved to Augusta, Ga.; grandson of Joseph and Lucy (Smith) Wheeler of Connecticut, and of Col. William and Sarah (Fuller) Hull of Massachusetts, the former a Revolutionary officer who received the thanks of congress for his distinguished military services on several battle fields and in the storming of Stony Point. The founder of the family in America was Moses Wheeler, a native of Kent County, England, who was born in 1598, migrated to Connecticut in 1638, locating first at New Haven and removing ten years later to Stratford where he became an extensive land owner and man of affairs. He died at the age of one hundred. His wife was Miriam Hawley. Their son, Moses, married Sarah Nichols and the grandson, Samuel, married Mary Brinsmade. When five years of age General Wheeler's mother died, and soon afterwards his father's fortune was lost by going surety for friends. The lad was sent to a maternal uncle in Connecticut, and received his preparatory education at Cheshire, that state. He was appointed to the U. S. military academy, West Point, by a New York congressman, and had the full course, five years at that time, at that institution, graduating in 1859. He was made brevet second lieutenant, 1st regiment of dragoons, and assigned to duty at the cavalry school, Carlisle, Pa. He served at army posts in Kansas and New Mexico until 1861. At the time he wrote his brother, Capt.

William H. Wheeler, of Georgia, who later lost his life in the service: "Much as I love the Union, much as I am attached to my profession, all will be given up when my State, by its action, shows that such a course is necessary and proper. If Georgia withdraws and becomes a separate State, I can not, with propriety, and justice to my people, hesitate in resigning my commission." In March, 1861, he returned to Augusta, where he was at once commissioned as first lieutenant of artillery in the Confederate Army and stationed at Pensacola, Fla. The volunteer officers and men who were assembling in camp on the southern coast were wholly untrained for military duty, coming as they did from law offices, banks, stores and farms, so he was at once found valuable in erecting batteries and fortifications, drilling regiments and instructing companies in artillery practice. He was soon recommended to President Jefferson Davis for promotion, among his advocates being General Bragg. Early in the summer he was promoted to the rank of colonel, and given command of the 19th Alabama infantry, which he led at the battle of Shiloh. Following this engagement he was promoted to brigadier-general. Later he was given the task of reorganizing the cavalry of the Army of the Mississippi, and in that branch of the service won his fame as one of the greatest cavalymen of all wars. He was commended by his commanding generals for "gallantry and skill" in the battles of Shiloh, Perryville, Murfreesboro, Tullahoma, Chickamauga, Ringgold, Dalton, Resaca, Adairsville, Cassville, Pickett's Mill, Kenesaw Mountain, Peach Tree Creek, Decatur, the battles around Atlanta and the battles of Averysboro and Bentonville. During the four years of the War of Secession he was in five hundred skirmishes and commanded in one hundred and twenty-seven battles, many of which were severe, and successful to the Southern cause. Two horses were killed under him in the battle of Shiloh, and during other battles a total of sixteen horses were shot and killed while he was riding them. Thirty-six staff officers fell by his side, eight of whom were killed, the others wounded. He received the thanks of the Confederate government for his "skill and gallantry in battle," and was thanked by South Carolina for his "brave and successful defense of the city of Aiken." During April and May, 1862, he commanded the troops in front of Corinth. He was ordered, with his brigade, by General Bragg, into western Tennessee to mislead the enemy and prevent the advance on Tupelo. Enroute he attacked the Union outposts, and fought a number of skirmishes. He placed himself in General Buell's path and delayed the advance of the Union Army upon Louisville until Bragg could reach Munfordville and capture the Federal post at that place. He commanded the cavalry at Perryville, October 8, 1862; was appointed chief of cavalry, and fought twenty-six engagements in thirteen days; promoted brigadier-general, October 30, 1862; commanded all of the Confederate cavalry engaged at Stone's River; promoted major-general, January 19, 1863; commanded a corps of cavalry in the battle of Chickamauga, September 19-20, 1863; stormed and captured the fortification at McMinnville and destroyed the vast depots of supplies stored there, followed by the destruction of the railroad track upon Rosecrank's line of communication between Nashville and Chattanooga; covered Bragg's retreat from Missionary Ridge, and fought at the battle of Ringgold. In May, 1864, he became the senior cavalry general of the Confederate armies. He defeated a large cavalry force at Vernell's station, capturing General La Grange and several hundred prisoners; fought at Dalton, Dug Gap, Snake Creek Gap, Resaca, Adairsville, Cass Station, New Hope, and Pickett's Mill, all from May 9th to 27th. He fought with his men, almost continuously during June and July, in the latter month penetrating Sherman's rear and capturing trains, prisoners and a large amount of property; defeated in skirmishes a raiding column of cavalry, ten thousand strong, commanded by Garrard, Stoneman and McCook, capturing 2,300 prisoners, with their horses and military property; participated in raids through Georgia and Tennessee, destroying railroads over which General Sherman expected to pass, contesting that invader's march to the sea through the Carolinas. He was nominated lieutenant-general on January 27, 1863, and the appointment confirmed, February 4, 1864. His last big battle was fought at Bentonville, N. C., March 18, 1865. "Wheeler's leap" from the bank into Duck River is as famous and daring an episode of warfare, as was "Weatherford's leap" into the Alabama River or Israel Putnam's plunge down "the stairs" at Horseneck. The story of his effort to reach General Forrest, who was advancing with two brigades, upon Shelbyville, whither he had been ordered to form a junction with Wheeler, and where the Confederates and Federals were engaged in battle, to inform him that the Federals were already in the outskirts of the town and the bridge in their hands has been saved to history by several chroniclers. This was but one of the many picturesque and daring acts of the little general's military career, but one that appeals to the imagination and establishes him among the fearless heroes of an heroic age. In the fight at Shelbyville he was the admiration of the opposing forces for his intrepid courage. While General Wheeler was not an Alabamian at that time, he led the Alabama regiments of Russell, Hagan, Morgan, Hannon, Malone, Blakey, Reese, Hunter, and nearly all the mounted commands of the State that were not under General Roddy. Gen. Joseph E. Johnston, wrote President Davis, in recommending Wheeler's promotion: "It is needless to remind you of the fidelity, zeal, courage and success with which General Wheeler has commanded his corps." General Hardee at the same time wrote the Confederate president: "I have not met any one in the war more devoted to the cause, or any one more zealous, conscientious, and faithful in the discharge of his duties." Gen. Robert E. Lee said after the war: "The two ablest cavalry officers which the war developed were General J. E. B. Stuart of Virginia, and General Joseph Wheeler, of the Army of Tennessee." Col. John S. Prather who commanded the 8th Confederate regiment said of him: "He had those great qualities that made a soldier fearless in his duty, gentle in character. The men under him worshipped him. He also had a rare combination of qualities in that he was fearless and dashing and yet prudent with his men. He did not march them into unnecessary slaughter, and yet he knew where the necessity came for aggressive action." He was always in the front with his men, or the last to leave the scene in protecting his troops when withdrawing from pursuit or protecting a retreat. General Wheeler's soldierly achievements during the War of Secession are all the more remarkable when his youth is taken into consideration. At twenty-two he was a second lieutenant in the U. S. Army, at twenty-four a colonel in the Confederate Army, the next year a brigadier-general and then major-general, at twenty-six a corps commander and at twenty-eight a lieutenant-general. General Hood in his memoirs said that had it not been for General Wheeler and his cavalry, Johnston's army never could have reached Kenesaw Mountain. He covered General Johnston's retreat from Chattanooga to Atlanta, and held Sherman's army in check for ten and twelve days at a time. On July 22, 1864, he captured a wagon train in the town of Decatur, Ga., behind the lines of General Sherman's army, thereby furnishing enough provisions for Johnston's hungry Confederates for several days. After General Wheeler's death memorial services were held for him by War of Secession organizations of both northern and southern survivors, in which he was many times declared by speakers to have been the ideal cavalryman of all great wars. Without doubt he stood in the front rank of the world's great generals, and in his conduct in battle displayed courage in its most concentrated form. At the memorial services held in Atlanta, Ga., the meeting was addressed by Corporal James Tanner, at the time commander-in-chief of the Grand Army of the Republic, the Federal veteran's association, who paid not only a fitting tribute of appreciation of General Wheeler's military abilities but also made a graceful acknowledgment of the high patriotism which actuated the Confederate soldier. Gen. Clement A. Evans, a distinguished Confederate officer said on that occasion: "General Wheeler was a true type of the patriotic soldier of our free nation, whose sword is never drawn except at the call of duty and always sheathed when that duty has been discharged. His military services were mainly in the Confederate Army, and can be learned only in the history of the Confederate War. His subsequent services gave him signal reputation, and they set new, but not richer brilliants in the crown of his Confederate fame."

After the surrender General Wheeler spent three years in New Orleans in the commission business. In 1869 he removed to Alabama and located upon his large plantation, in Lawrence County, where he conducted extensive agricultural activities and practised law. In 1880, he was elected to congress from the eighth district. His seat was contested by Mr. William Lowe, and in June, 1882, he was unseated. He was again elected in 1884, and to all successive congresses until his voluntary retirement in 1899 following a re-election to office. At the outbreak of war between the United States and Spain, the Island of Cuba, then under Spanish rule, affording the cause and the battle ground, General Wheeler, then in congress offered his sword to the government. Throughout the north there was heard scattering expressions of distrust of Southern loyalty, highly offensive to all survivors of the Confederate Army, whose sensibilities were wounded by intimations of distrust of their fidelity in the terms of surrender or to the government. When reminded that there then stood upon the statute books of the nation a law prohibiting any man who had borne a commission in the Confederate Army from holding one in the army of the United States, General Wheeler made the response that he "reckoned that there would be plenty of room in the ranks." On May 4, 1898, when sixty-two years of age he was commissioned major-general of volunteers, and was assigned to the command of the cavalry division of the U. S. Army and sent to Cuba. He was senior officer in command of the field at San Juan, July 1-2; senior member of the commission that negotiated the surrender of Santiago; was assigned to the command of the U. S. forces at Montauk, N. Y., October, 1898, and made commander of the 4th army corps. In "The South in the building of the Nation," it is said: "When the war with Spain broke out he (Gen. Wheeler) was made a major-general of volunteers. At Santiago, despite an order from General Shafter to fall back, he pressed forward to victory. It was told of him that at the height of the battle he exclaimed, 'Charge them, boys, the Yankees are running,' but immediately correcting himself he said, 'No, I mean that the Spaniards are running, and both Yankees and Rebels must charge them.' He was given full credit for that victory. On his return to this country he had many receptions and made many speeches in which he warmly advocated the cordial friendship between 'the once belligerent but now fraternal sections of our common country.'" On April 12, 1899, he was honorably discharged from the service, but three days later was commissioned as brigadier-general of volunteers, commanding the 1st brigade, 2nd division, 8th corps, Philippine Islands. The fall of that year found him in the orient with the American Army aiding in the pacification of the Filipinos, those islands then being under the stars and stripes. General Wheeler's services in the Philippine Islands, whither he was sent at his own urgent request by President McKinley, were distinguished by the same qualities of judgment, courage and dash as in his military career on other scenes of strife. In part 8, vol. 1, "Annual report of the War Department for 1900," will be found the full story of his part in that period of history. General Wheeler's report at this time disclosed his disappointments at being held back, and his opinion of the slowness of the movement and the cumbersomeness of the plans which guided it. Lengthy tactical orders from General McArthur's headquarters, after two months of fruitless scouting, during the period preceding the taking of Mabalacat, a deserted town when finally captured, invoked the old Confederate cavalryman's complete disgust. This was not his way of dealing with an enemy, and he dared to express his opinions of the Philippine campaign to the war department and to the president. An incident of the campaign is typical: having been ordered by General McArthur to march his foot troops to a given point within a certain time with rest periods designated, General Wheeler took issue with his superior officer, explained his own methods, and upon McArthur's declaration that such a course would incapacitate the men for two weeks, demonstrated his views. The little General dismounted his horse, placed a sick soldier upon it, took the gun from another sick soldier, and with his old cry, "Come on, boys," led the march afoot over the rough island roads, overtook the cavalry and bringing up his men in fine shape, ready for battle if need be. If he needed to know what was on the other side of a river, and there were no bridges, he swam across. When the railroad was washed away, he built pontoon bridges, and got more supplies across than his orders called for. On June 16, 1900, he was appointed brigadier-general, U. S. Army, and was assigned to the command of the department of the lakes until his retirement in September of that year. Author: "Account of Kentucky campaign," 1862; "Cavalry tactics," 1863; "Military history of Alabama," "History of Santiago campaign," 1898; "History of Cuba, 1496-1899," 1899; eight volumes of congressional speeches, 1883-98; "History of the effect upon civilization of the wars of the 9th century," "Report on the Island of Guam," "Wheeler genealogy," 1903, compiled by General Wheeler and his wife; monographs upon the lives of Admiral Dewey, William McKinley, "Stonewall" Jackson and Theodore Roosevelt. He also made extensive historical and political contributions to current magazines. Married: February 8, 1866, at her father's plantation home, to Daniella, widow of Benjamin Sherrod, and daughter of Col. Richard and Lucy W. After the second battle of Manassas he was transferred and promoted to sergeant of artillery, and in 1863 was commissioned lieutenant and assigned to Gen. Humes' cavalry brigade. He was in the battles of New Hope Church, Resaca, where he was again wounded, Kenesaw Mountain, Peach Tree Creek, the Atlanta campaign, Wheeler's raid through Tennessee, and opposing Sherman's march to the sea. He was taken prisoner near Macon in 1864, but escaped after three weeks' confinement and joined his command in South Carolina. In January, 1865, he was promoted to captain in the provisional army. His command was in front of Sherman until the battle of Fayetteville, N. C., where his commander, Gen. Humes, was severely wounded. Capt. White carried Gen. Humes from the field to Raleigh and remained with him until the surrender of Johnston. After the war he became connected with the Memphis & Charleston Railroad; rose from the position of brakeman to that of freight and passenger conductor; and in 1876 became the agent of the company in the law and stock department. He is an Episcopalian, Mason, a Knight of Pythias, a Knight of Honor, and a member of the Order of Railroad Conductors. Married: in 1866, to Susie

Withers. Children: five. Residence: Huntsville.

WHITFIELD, CHARLES BOAZ, physician, aide-de-camp, C. S. Army, was a native of Marengo County, where he was reared. He was educated at the University of North Carolina, receiving the A. B. degree, 1858, and the M. A. degree, 1861. He was drill master in the military school at Tuscaloosa part of 1861, and in the spring of 1862, enlisted as a private in Co. B, 40th Alabama infantry regiment, C. S. Army, and accompanied that regiment to Vicksburg early in 1863, where he shared its service until after the fall of Vicksburg. He was later assigned to the staff of Gen. A. W. Reynolds, as aide-de-camp, and took part in the battles of Chickamauga, Missionary Ridge, Rocky Face bridge and the fighting of the Atlanta campaign until wounded at Kenesaw Mountain. Upon his recovery he rejoined the army, then under General Hood, and was appointed aide-de-camp on the staff of Gen. Stephen D. Lee. He participated in the campaign in north Georgia and the march through Alabama to Florence. After crossing the Tennessee River with the army he was prostrated with brain fever. Upon partial recovery, in the early part of 1865, he started to rejoin his command in North Carolina, but before he reached that region the army was surrendered. At the close of the war he went to New York and engaged in the study of medicine, in which he was graduated by the College of physicians and surgeons in 1871. He began the practice at Jefferson, Marengo County, but later removed to Demopolis. He is president of the State medical association and of the county medical society. Married: in 1881, to WHITFIELD, HAMPTON S., professor of mathematics, University of Alabama, 1870-71; of mathematics and astronomy, 1872-76; and of mathematics, 1876-78.

WHITFIELD, JOHN FREDERICK, lawyer, was born March 16, 1836, at Hayneville, Lowndes County, and died April 24, 1891, in Montgomery; son of George B. and Sarah (Vanner) Whitfield, natives, respectively, of North Carolina and Virginia, the former of whom was a farmer. Left an orphan at an early age, Mr. Whitfield entered a newspaper office at Griffin, Ga., and learned the printing trade. He became foreman of the "Advertiser" office in Montgomery, and in 1859 was one of the organizers and became one of the editors of the Montgomery "Daily Mail." He joined the Montgomery True Blues in 1861, and as orderly sergeant was with them at Pensacola, and later, as part of the Third Alabama infantry regiment in the army of Virginia. He was promoted to captain before the battle of Seven Pines, and soon after resigned his commission and returned to Montgomery, where he raised a company for the First Alabama infantry. As captain of Co. K, in that regiment, he joined Bragg's army and after the battle of Corinth was sent to Island No. 10. He was taken prisoner there, sent to Johnson's Island, and at the end of six months was exchanged. At Port Hudson he commanded a company of artillery under Gen. Gardner; was again captured and taken as a prisoner of war to New Orleans; was held at Johnson's Island until the latter part of 1864, when he was paroled and sent through the lines. He was never exchanged, and reached Montgomery as the war closed. He again entered the office of the Montgomery "Daily Mail," began as a type setter, was soon made foreman and later purchased a half interest in the plant. He was connected with that paper until 1870, when he gave up the newspaper business and turned his attention to railroading, first with the Montgomery & Eufaula Railroad as claim agent, and later as general agent of the Louisville and Nashville Railroad. Finding that his position as general claim agent necessitated a knowledge of law, he studied it and was admitted to the bar in 1874. He was a member of the Alabama State Bar Association. Married: in 1861, at Montgomery, to Florence Chamberlain Sanders, who died September 17, 1906. Last residence: Montgomery.

WILCOX, EDWIN MEAD, botanist, for a number of years a resident of Alabama, was born May 21, 1876, at Busti, Chautauqua County, N. Y.; son of Abram Frank and Sally Maria (Mead) Wilcox. He received the degree of B. S. from Ohio State university, 1896; A. M., 1898, and Ph. D., 1899, at Harvard university. For one year he taught in Oklahoma, came to Alabama as professor of plant physiology and pathology, Alabama polytechnic institute, Auburn, 1901-08, and removed to Nebraska, 1908, where he is professor of agricultural botany at the University of Nebraska. Married: June 28, 1899, to Cornelia Ruth, daughter of Nicholas and Elizabeth (Ganger) Eichhorn, of Columbus, O. Children: 1. Elizabeth Sally; 2. Christine Louise; 3. Mead Nicholas. Residence: Lincoln, Neb.

WILCOX, JOSEPH M., lieutenant in U. S. Army, was born in Connecticut, 1791, was killed by the Indians on the Alabama River, January 15, 1814, and buried with military honors at Ft. Claiborne, January 17, 1814; son of Gen. Joseph Wilcox, Revolutionary soldier of Connecticut. Lt. Wilcox, trained at West Point military academy, was made 1st lieutenant January 3, 1812, assigned to the 3rd Regiment, U. S. Infantry, and sent to Ft. Claiborne, where he served under Gen. Claiborne and Col. Russell until his death. Col. Russell had been sent to the Cahaba to disperse an uprising of the Indians, but became separated from Lieut. Dinkins and his barges containing military supplies; he ordered Lieut. Wilcox and five men to take a boat and go in search of him. Unfortunately the boat upset and spoiled the ammunition and supplies, and delayed the object of his quest. A boat load of Indians, realizing his helpless condition, attacked the little party and killed or captured all, except one, who escaped into the canebrake. Lieut. Wilcox was desperately wounded, but continued the fight until overpowered and was finally brained with a tomahawk, dying soon after. This tragedy occurred on the Alabama River, between Canton and Prairie Bluff. The county of Wilcox was named in his honor. Last residence: Fort Claiborne.

Resided also in Talladega County.—Pension Book, State Branch Bank, Mobile.

WILEY, ARIOSTO APPLING, lawyer, representative in congress, was born November 6, 1848, in Clayton, Barbour County, and died June 17, 1908, at Hot Springs, Va.; son of Judge James McCaleb and Cornelia Ann (Appling) Wiley, of Troy, the former of whom was a native of Cabarrus County, N. C., born March 12, 1806, came to Alabama with his parents in 1818, was for a time a physician in Dallas County, later was a lawyer in Clayton, was at one time a surgeon general in the Mexican Army, and after his return to Alabama resumed the practice of law, was elected to congress after the War of Secession, but was not allowed to take his seat, was elected judge of an east Alabama circuit, embracing Pike and Barbour Counties, and held that office for eight years, and died December 2, 1877; grandson of Evan Shelby Wiley, a North Carolinian of Scotch-Irish ancestry, and a descendant of the Shelybs of North Carolina, Tennessee and Kentucky, and of James McCaleb, a Scot who emigrated to North Carolina, was secretary of the Mecklenberg convention which passed the Declaration of Independence and was a captain in the Revolutionary Army; brother of Oliver Cicero Wiley (q. v.). His parents moved to Troy when he was a year old, and he was reared at that place, securing his early education in a public academy there. He attended Emory and Henry college, Virginia, and was graduated with distinction in June, 1871, and the next year was graduated from the law department. In October, 1872, he located in Montgomery, where he at once entered upon the successful practice of law. Later he formed a partnership with ex-Chief Justice Samuel F. Rice and Judge Thomas G. Jones. In 1882 he was elected to the legislature from Montgomery County, and during that session served as chairman of the committee on the revision of laws and as a member of the committee on corporations. From that time until he was elected to congress he served almost continuously in the State legislature, either in the house or in the senate. At the time of his election to the Fifty-seventh congress he was state senator from the twenty-eighth district, and was chairman of the senate judiciary committee. For five years he was captain of the Montgomery rifles; and later was on the staff of Governors Thomas Seay, William C. Oates, Joseph F. Johnston and William J. Samford, with the rank of colonel of cavalry. On June 9, 1891, President McKinley appointed him lieutenant colonel of the Fifth regiment, U. S. volunteer infantry, one of the ten regiments organized under a special act of congress. He served for eleven months in Cuba; was legal adviser and chief of staff of Henry W. Lawton at Santiago; and assisted Gen. Leonard Wood in the establishment of civil government in the Eastern province. He was elected to the Fifty-seventh congress November 6, 1900, receiving about twenty-five hundred more votes than were polled for the Democratic presidential electors, and was re-elected to the Fifty-eighth, Fifty-ninth and Sixtieth congresses.

For fifteen years Col. Wiley was a member of the Montgomery council from ward five. He accompanied the party of Secretary of War William Howard Taft to the Philippines, and on that trip and in his work on the military committee in the house of representatives he was brought into close contact with Secretary Taft. Out of that contact there grew up a close personal friendship, maintained until Col. Wiley's death. During his eight years service in congress, Col. Wiley aided in drafting the bill to promote the efficiency of the military organization, and was elected as the Democratic member of the committee to make the argument in favor of its passage. This bill is regarded as the only measure that has ever made proper or adequate provision for the maintenance, discipline and efficiency of the State troops. His crowning work as a congressman, however, was in securing the enactment of a law for the relief of certain homesteaders in Alabama, who had entered on what is commonly known as the Mobile, Coosa & Tennessee railroad grant lands by the terms of which the homes of many hundred poor but deserving people were saved to them. His part in that contest attracted much local attention. He secured an appropriation of seventy-five thousand dollars to enlarge the custom house at Montgomery that it might meet the exigencies of the public business. He secured for the Alabama River all the money which the engineer in charge reported to the river and harbor committee necessary to be expended either in improving the stream or deepening its channel. He obtained an appropriation of ten thousand dollars with which to make a preliminary survey of Fish River in Baldwin County, with the object in view of determining whether or not this stream was worthy of government improvement. He introduced the bill to increase the per diem compensation of Federal jurors from two dollars to three dollars, which bill passed both houses of congress and received the executive approval. He procured the passage of a bill giving to the state of Alabama the spars taken from sunken Spanish battleships, and brought to this country from the Caribbean Sea and Manila Bay. He introduced a bill which passed both houses of congress with "an amendment" conferring upon the Federal courts jurisdiction concurrently with the State courts to apprehend, try and punish railroad marauders in certain cases. To his untiring efforts is due the measure requiring the court of appeals of the fifth circuit to hold not less than one term of said court in Montgomery during each year, a measure of much importance to the people. He introduced a bill, and labored untiringly until he secured its enactment into law, authorizing a compromise and the settlement of the Beebe-Henshaw litigation, involving title to the Southern Cotton Oil property at Montgomery, which had been in wearisome litigation for more than fourteen years. He took great interest in promoting the rural free delivery service, and, in his district, he was instrumental in securing the establishment of more than fifty of these mail routes. His death came at a time when he had reached a point of greater usefulness to his constituents. For some months his health had shown a decline, but it was hoped that his strong constitution would enable him to recover. Leaving Washington for Hot Springs, Va., he hoped to obtain relief, but on June 17, 1908, he died. He was interred in Oakwood cemetery, Montgomery. Married: November 6, 1877, in Montgomery, to Mittie A. Noble, daughter of B. F. and Mary T. (Cook) Noble, of Montgomery. Child: Noble James, U. S. Army. Last residence: Washington, D. C.

WILEY, HENRY C., lawyer, was born October 4, 1840, at Clayton, Barbour County; son of Judge J. McCaleb and Elizabeth (Duckworth) Wiley (q. v.). He was educated in the common schools of Clayton; at Davidson college, N. C., and at Oglethorpe university, Milledgeville, Ga. In 1861 he entered the C. S. Army, as a private in "Terry's Texas Rangers," afterwards the 8th Texas cavalry, subsequently rising to the command of his company. He began the study of law in the office of his father soon after the cessation of hostilities, and in October, 1865, was admitted to the bar. In 1868 he was admitted to practice before the supreme court. He later became a member of the firm of Gardner and Wiley, at Troy, and was the only solicitor ever elected by the people of Pike County. He was a Mason; Knight of Pythias; and Knight of Honor. Married: in 1861, to Henrietta, daughter of Dr. A. N. and Ann (Pace) Worthy (q. v.); (2) to Ophelia, younger sister of first wife. WILEY, JAMES McCALEB, physician and lawyer, was born in 1806, in Cabarrus County, N. C., and died in 1878, in Troy; son of Evan Shelby Wiley, a native of North Carolina, of Scotch-Irish ancestry, who removed to Alabama and located near Courtland where he was a farmer and miller; grandson of James McCaleb, secretary of the Mecklenburg convention which passed the Declaration of Independence, and a captain in the Continental Army during the Revolutionary War. Judge Wiley attended school at Chapel Hill, N. C., and in 1823 came to Alabama to join his parents, who had settled in Lawrence County in 1818. He read medicine after coming to Alabama and later graduating from a Philadelphia medical college and practiced in Dallas County, Clinton, La., Butler County, and Clayton, before giving up his profession to devote himself to the study of law, which he practiced, 1849, on removing to Troy. He was register in chancery, 1839. He was elected major general of the state militia and was commissioned a colonel during the War of Secession, but did not enter the service. In 1865 he was appointed to the circuit court bench and in 1866, was elected a member of the U. S. house of representatives but was not permitted to hold the seat. In 1868 he was elected judge of the circuit court, retiring after eight years' service on account of ill health. He was a Presbyterian; a member of the Sons of Temperance; and a Mason. Married: (1) April 19, 1827, to Elizabeth, daughter of Randolph Duckworth, a native of North Carolina, who removed to Alabama, located in Dallas County, and became a wealthy planter; (2) November 15, 1843, to Cornelia Appling; (3) January 3, 1875, to Rebecca Covington Wales. Children: by the first wife: 1. Rhydonia; 2. James Horatio; 3. Thomas Walter; 4. Henry Clay; by second, 1. Ariosto Appling (q. v.); 2. Oliver Cicero; (q. v.); 3. Julia Lamar; 4. Ida. Last residence: Troy.

WILEY, JOHN, farmer, was born in North Carolina and died January 2, 1886, at Chulafinnee; son of Thomas and Tabitha (Noel) Wiley, the former a native of North Carolina, who was married in Kingston, Tenn., in 1812, and moved to Cobb County, Ga., in 1821, was in the Indian War and lying sick at Talladega when the battle of Jackson's Ford was fought; grandson of John Wiley, of England. He moved across the river to the "New Purchase" immediately after the Indians were driven out; in 1838 settled in St. Clair County and in 1840 removed to Bluff Springs, Talladega, now Clay County. He was a farmer and although a devout Presbyterian affiliated with the Methodist church at Mt. Moriah because his own denomination had no congregation near by. Married: Susannah, daughter of Thomas and Rebecca (Holly) Faires, of Edgefield District, South Carolina, the former a native of Ireland and a Revolutionary officer. Children: 1. Mary Ann, m. David Glenn; 2. Katherine, m. William Boyce Calloway; 3. Evaline, m. James Jones; 4. Elizabeth, m. (1) James Lackey, (2) Judge H. M. Evans; 5. Eleanor Eliza, m. Andrew Jackson Ashcraft; 6. Nancy, m. WILEY, OLIVER CICERO, business man, manufacturer and member of congress, was born January 30, 1851, at Troy, Pike County, and died October 18, 1917, at that place; son of James McCaleb and Cornelia Ann (Appling) Wiley (q. v.). Mr. Wiley was educated in Troy, and owing to the conditions obtaining during the War of Secession period, was deprived of the advantages of a college education. In 1871, he took a business course in Bryant and Stratton's college, Nashville, Tenn., and two years later entered upon his business career in Troy. His associates, successively were, W. S. Coleman, J. C. Murphree, and Clarence Murphree. In 1882, he aided in organizing the Troy fertilizer company, which erected the first fertilizer factory and acid chambers in Alabama, of which he was elected president and general manager. In 1903 this company was merged with the Standard chemical and oil company, now one of the largest fertilizer factories in the South, of which he was vice-president and general manager. He was elected captain of the W. C. Oates Rifles, Alabama State Troops, and was for five years a member of the city council of Troy. He took a conspicuous part in the organization and development of the old Alabama midland railroad, now the Atlantic coast line, and was the first president. The building of this railroad opened up a rich agricultural empire, that is occupied by an intelligent and progressive citizenry. He was a Democrat and served on the State executive committee for the second congressional district, 1884-

86; alternate delegate, 1888, to the Democratic convention held at St. Louis. WILLIAMS, MARCUS GERVES, Methodist minister and educator, was born October 25, 1831, at Boonville, Boone County, Mo., and died April 4, 1894, at Athens; son of Rev. Justinian and Elizabeth (Hammond) Williams, the former also a native of Boonville, a Methodist minister who belonged later to the Tennessee Conference and lived in Athens and Tuscumbia, in his latter years. Rev. Mr. Williams was educated at LaGrange college, LaGrange, under the presidency of Dr. Wadsworth. He read medicine for a while, but decided that his life was meant for religious service and went into the Methodist ministry. He was licensed to preach in March, 1854, and entered the Tennessee conference in trial, and remained there until the outbreak of the War of Secession. He entered the Confederate Army as chaplain of the 3rd Tennessee infantry and at the expiration of his commission raised a company for the 9th Alabama cavalry regiment of which he was made captain. After serving in this capacity for a year and a half he was so seriously wounded in the battle of Murfreesboro that he was compelled to retire from the army. He settled in Lawrence County, and taught school, but in 1867 was transferred to the Arkansas Conference where he resumed preaching. Two years later he was transferred to the Southwest Missouri conference and remained in that state for eleven years, devoting himself to education and the ministry. In 1880, while holding the professorship of languages in the Central female college in Lexington, Mo., he resigned his position to return to the North Alabama conference and was placed in charge of the New Market circuit, Madison County, and the Tuscumbia station. He taught in the New Market high school and the Tuscumbia male academy. In 1884 he was elected president of the Athens female college, Athens. Six years later on account of ill health he resigned this position. His failing strength compelled his retirement from active life and he was placed on the superannuated list of the North Alabama conference. He was a Mason and an Odd Fellow. Married: in October, 1856, in Lauderdale County, to Missanah Coleman, daughter of Richard S. and Sarah D. (Fielder) Coffee of that place, the former a native of Prince Edward County, Va., born in 1800 and located in Madison County, in 1818, and removed to Lauderdale, 1821, where he lived until his death in 1879, the latter a native of Williamson County, Tenn., and the mother of twelve children. Children: 1. Sarah Elizabeth, m. Cyrus W. Crenshaw, Athens; 2. Rebecca Williams, m. Thomas E. Knight, Greensboro. Last residence: Athens.

John Williams, of Orange County, and Col. Joseph Williams, of Surrey County, the latter a soldier of the Revolution, and first cousin to Judge John Williams, of Granville County, and Thomas Henderson, of Guilford County, members of the same congress, a supporter of the rights of the colony, in the Revolutionary war, and who was accidentally drowned January 25, 1805, while attempting to ford a swollen stream, the latter, (Mrs. Williams), the sister of Elizabeth Williamson, wife of Col. John Williams, his brother, of Orange County; grandson of Nathaniel Williams who was born December 12, 1712; great-grandson of John and Mary Williams, the former born January 29, 1679, in Wales, immigrating to Virginia about 1700-10 and settling in Hanover County. Marmaduke Williams received a splendid education and was a lawyer. In 1802 he represented Caswell County in the North Carolina State senate, and succeeded his brother, Robert Williams, who had been appointed Governor of the Mississippi Territory, as a representative in congress. He was twice re-elected serving through the eighth, ninth and tenth congresses, from October 17, 1803, to March 3, 1809. The following year, 1810 he moved to Mississippi Territory locating at Huntsville and later, in 1818, removing to Tuscaloosa. In 1819 he was elected a member of the constitutional convention of Alabama from Tuscaloosa County, and at the first state election in the same year he was a candidate for governor but was defeated by William W. Bibb. He was elected a member of the State legislature for eleven years, 1821, 1822, 1825, 1826, 1829, 1830, 1832, 1833, 1837, 1838, and 1839, being an active and useful member of that body, and was the first member to move the expediency of the formation of a constitution and State government for Alabama. In 1826 he served as commissioner to adjust the unsettled territorial accounts with Mississippi. He held the office of Judge of the county court from 1833-42. Judge Williams was secretary of the board of trustees of the University of Alabama from its incorporation in 1821 to 1840. He was a Whig and Methodist. WILLIAMS, ROBERT S., physician, was born August 27, 1827, at Petersburg, Va., and died on his plantation near Mt. Meigs; son of Rev. John D. and Mary (Johnson) Williams, of Oxford, N. C., and Dinwiddie County, Va., respectively, but in 1835 located at Wetumpka, where he followed the Baptist ministry and agriculture; grandson of Lawdon Williams, of Oxford, N. C., and of William Johnson of Virginia, the latter being related to the Randolphs and Riveses of that state; great-grandson of Commodore John Williams, a naval officer during the American Revolution and descendant of Roger Williams, the great Baptist divine of Rhode Island. Dr. Williams received his early education in the common schools of Wetumpka until twelve years of age; soon after which time he left home to go to Marion, where he expected to take a printer's job on the Alabama Baptist. Arriving, he found the press in the hands of a receiver, but acting on the advice of Gen. King he bought it for $2.50, his entire possession. For two years he operated the paper. He then returned to Wetumpka and read medicine, but his studies were interrupted by the Mexican War. He joined the 6th Alabama regiment and landed with the troops near the mouth of the Rio Grande River. While in Vera Cruz he was detailed to hospital service and obtained valuable knowledge in connection with the yellow fever. In 1849 he graduated from Jefferson medical college, Philadelphia, and entered upon the practice at Line Creek, Montgomery County. In 1851 he removed to Macon County. In 1860 he returned to Wetumpka, where he continued the practice of his profession. After the war he abandoned medicine for agriculture and gave his medical library to the State association, of which he was a member. Dr. Williams was opposed to secession and refused a commission as surgeon in the army, but gave his services to the sick and wounded of both sides during the seven days' fighting about Richmond, Va. He was the first to discover that quinine given in heroic doses was a toxic agent, causing blindness and deafness. WILLIAMSON, JAMES SPULLOCK, planter and captain C. S. Army, was born January 29, 1809, in Wilkes County, Ga., and was killed in battle June 30, 1862; son of Peter and Elizabeth (Spullock) Williamson, of Bedford County, Va., the latter a lawyer and preacher, active in defense of Georgia during the border troubles, as lieutenant 5th Georgia regiment, and among the early Alabama pioneers, represented Montgomery County in the legislature of 1821, was probate judge of Montgomery County and the first probate judge of Lowndes County, having been instrumental in choosing the name of the latter county, also naming and locating Hayneville as the county site; grandson of Micajah and Sallie (Gilham) Williamson, both of Bedford County, Va., who located immediately after their marriage in 1768 near Washington, Wilkes County, Ga., the former being selected by the pioneer community to command the volunteer forces opposed to the Indians who were incited by the Tories to hostility; was also a lieutenant colonel under Gen. Elijah Clarke during the Revolutionary War, being in command of the division when Gen. Clarke was ill with smallpox, and at that time fortified and defended Augusta, Ga.; the latter was frequently a participant in the Indian conflicts and was forced to witness the burning of her home and twelve year old son by the savages. The first immigrant of the family line, John Williamson, father of Micajah, came from the north of Ireland and settled in Bedford County, Va. Captain Williamson received his education under frontier conditions, but was an intelligent man and had considerable scholastic attainments. He located in Lowndes County with his parents in 1846 and became a planter. He was a member of the legislature from that county several terms and a member of the Secession convention. At the outbreak of the War of Secession, he was made captain of Co. B, 14th Alabama infantry regiment, and was killed at Frazier's farm, Va., 1862, while commanding the regiment, Colonel Baine and Major Wood both having fallen. He was a Democrat. Married: (1) to Martha Roach; (2) about 1850 or '51, to Eugenia Caroline, daughter of William and Eliza Ann Read, the former a native of New York, the son of an Englishman of noble birth who left his native country on account of his disapproval of the law of primogeniture, the latter born in Montgomery and both later residents of Lowndes County. Children: by first wife, 1. Peter; by second wife, 2. Arthur Fort; 3. son, d. in infancy; 4. Hugh Read (q. v.); 5. Eliza; 6. James S., d. young. Last residence: Lowndes County.

WILLIAMSON, PETER, member Alabama legislature and probate judge, was born in Wilkes County, Ga., February 25, 1772, and died at Sandy Ridge, Lowndes County, about 1864; son of Micajah and Sarah (Gilham) Williamson, the former a Revolutionary soldier. His educational opportunities were limited, but he was an extensive reader. He saw active service against the Indians in their uprisings in Georgia until 1819, when he removed to Alabama with his brothers-in-law, Charles Tait and Col. Fitch and his nephew, John A. Campbell (q. v.). He located in Montgomery County, which he represented in the legislature of 1812. When Lowndes County was taken from Montgomery's territory he was made judge of probate of the new county, and served from 1830 to 1841, when he was retired by the operation of the law restricting service by age. He was a lay-preacher, Whig, and Methodist. Married: (1) Miss McAlpin; (2) name unknown; (3) Elizabeth Spullock; (4) Miss Brown, who died in China Grove, June 3, 1849. Children by the first wife: 1. WILMER, RICHARD HOOKER, second Protestant Episcopal bishop of Alabama, was born March 15, 1816, at Alexandria, Fairfax County, Va., and died June 14, 1900, at Spring Hill; son of William Holland and Marion Hannah (Cox) Wilmer, the former a native of Chestertown, Kent County, Md., who lived at Alexandria and Williamsburg, Va., was ordained priest in the Protestant Episcopal church in 1808, served as rector of St. Paul's church, Alexandria, Va., and St. John's, Washington, Va., was instrumental in founding the Episcopal theological seminary, near Alexandria, and served as professor in that institution, was president of William and Mary College, Virginia, and rector of Bruton Parish, Williamsburg, in 1826, and had served three times as president of the house of clerical and lay deputies of the general convention of the Protestant Episcopal church; grandson of Rev. Simon and Ann (Ringgold) Wilmer, who lived at Chestertown, Kent County, Md., whose three sons all entered the ministry of the Protestant Episcopal church, one of whom, Simon, was the father of Joseph Pere Bell Wilmer, Bishop of Louisiana, and of Maj. Richard and Jane (Ross) Cox, of Mount Holly, N. J., the former a major in the "Jersey Line" in the Revolutionary War; great-grandson of Simon Wilmer, and of Col. Richard and Mercy (Taylor) Cox, who were married in 1727, the latter a lineal descendant of that Norman baron "Taillefer," who came with Duke William in his invasion of England, and whose death in the battle of Hastings is described by Bulwer in "The Last of the Saxon Kings"; great-great-grandson of Simon Wilmer; great-great-great-grandson of Lambert Wilmer; great-great-great-great-grandson of Simon Wilmer, the progenitor of the family in America, a prominent man in New Kent County, Md., a country gentleman and a Royalist, who was forced to leave England with the Cavalier emigration, 1649-1659, in order to escape Puritan intolerance, who was a vestryman of St. Paul's church, January 24, 1693, clerk of the county, November 27, 1693, and representative of his county in the Maryland legislature in 1698; and a descendant of Edward Taylor, who came over from England in 1692, and settled at Garretts' Hill, N. J., and who acquired large landed estates in Monmouth County, N. J., through his relationship to Sir George Carteret, proprietor of East New Jersey. Bishop Wilmer was godson of Nellie Custis, granddaughter of Martha Washington.

At the age of five years Bishop Wilmer was left motherless. Soon afterward his father married Anne Brice Fitzhugh, and the strongest ties grew up between her and her stepson. His father died a few years later, and at the age of twelve the boy was the oldest son in a family of nine, with much of the family support dependent on him. In 1831 Mrs. Wilmer moved from Alexandria to Seminary Hill, and opened a high school at the present site of the Episcopal High School. Bishop Wilmer attended that school for a year, then went to Yale College, where he was graduated in 1836. Returning to Virginia, he immediately entered the Episcopal theological seminary, and during his three years of theological training lived with his stepmother, who had closed her school and moved to Lebanon, a few miles distant, and helped manage the farm. On Easter day, 1839, in Monumental church, Richmond, Va., he was made deacon by Bishop Moore. On the next Easter day he was advanced to the priesthood by the same bishop. His first charge was at St. Paul's church, Goochland County, and St. John's, Fluvanna County, Va. When he took charge of the parish there was not one male communicant in the entire flock. He took hold of the men in that region, won their respect for himself and for his cause, and within the few years of his incumbency revolutionized social and religious conditions in the neighborhood. After a short period as rector in Wilmington, N. C., Bishop Wilmer accepted the charge of Grace church, Berryville and Wickliffe Parish, in Clarke County, Va., and remained there from 1844 to 1849, as long a pastorate as he ever exercised in any one place. For a year following that charge he was compelled to drop all work on account of a breakdown in health. When but partly restored he went to Loudoun and Fauquier Counties, Va., for a ministry of three years, 1850-1853. In the latter year he moved to Forest, Bedford County, and in 1858 took the country work at Brook Hill, near Richmond. His life as rector of Emmanuel church was that of a suburban pastor, having the advantages of proximity to a thriving city, yet with all the benefits of country freedom. He was a deputy from Virginia to the General Convention of the Protestant Episcopal church, which met in Richmond in 1859.

As the War of Secession became imminent, Bishop Wilmer became captain and drillmaster of the home-guard raised in the neighborhood. Later he resigned his captaincy and contented himself with ministering to the sick and wounded. He was unanimously elected bishop of Alabama, November 21, 1861, and was consecrated at St. Paul's church, Richmond, Va., March 6, 1862, Bishop Meade presiding, and Bishops Johns and Elliott assisting. The first years of his episcopate were confined to the work of holding the diocesan forces together, to caring for the women, children and old men, and to looking after the spiritual condition of the soldiers. Toward the close of the war, in 1863, he founded the Church Home for Orphans in Tuscaloosa, on his personal responsibility, and maintained the home without interruption, moving it to Mobile in 1865. He attempted to establish a publishing house for the distribution of religious literature in the army; but while hundreds of prayer-books were distributed, the breaking of lines of communication by the Federal troops caused the abandonment of the scheme. At the end of the war, friends in Mobile presented to him a house and lot at Spring Hill, seven miles from the city, and he moved there from his residence in Greensboro. During the reconstruction period, in 1865, he issued a pastoral letter stating that no such thing as government existed in the South, and recommending that the prayer for "those in civil authority" be omitted. In consequence of that letter Gen. George H. Thomas suspended the bishop and clergy, and closed the churches of the state, but the order of suspension was set aside by the Federal civil authorities.

In 1887, the one book written by Bishop Wilmer was published, entitled, "The Recent Past from a Southern Standpoint." A second edition appeared six months later; and other editions have appeared from time to time. Two years later a portion of the book was printed separately under the title "Guide Marks for Young Churchmen." In 1888 his most noted pastoral, "The Words of Christ," was published. That pastoral, in amplified form, he preached before the General Convention in Baltimore, 1892. In 1890, on account of his increasing infirmities, Bishop Wilmer consented to the election of a coadjutor, and in 1891 the Rev. Henry Melville Jackson, of Richmond, Va., was consecrated Bishop-coadjutor of Alabama. That assistance left Bishop Wilmer free for the continued use of his pen, and the concluding years were filled with writing and the publishing of tracts and pamphlets, among them, "The Efficiency of Prayer," and "Confession of Sin Not Profession of Religion." He received the honorary degree of A. M. from Yale, 1846; D. D. from William and Mary College, 1857, and from the University of the South, 1878; LL. D. from the University of Oxford, England, 1867, and from the University of Alabama in 1880. He is buried in Magnolia cemetery, Mobile. Married: October 6, 1840, at "Belmont," Nelson County, Va., to Margaret Brown, daughter of Alexander and Lucy Shands (Rives) Brown, who lived at Belmont, the former a native of Perth, Scotland, who came to America in 1811, and who was a lineal descendant of King James I, of Scotland, the latter a sister of Hon. William Cabell Rives, the Virginia statesman; granddaughter of Robert and Margaret Jordan (Cabell) Rives of "Oak Ridge." Children: 1. Marian, m. Capt. Harvey E. Jones, C. S. Army, Montgomery; 2. Alexander Brown, m. Edith Gordon, Mobile; 3. Dr. William Holland, m. Rebecca Lewis Smith, Philadelphia, Pa. Last residence: Spring Hill.

WILMORE, JOHN JENKINS, teacher, was born October 15, 1864, in Winchester, Randolph County, Ind.; son of James W. and Hannah Ann (Jenkins) Wilmore, both natives of Indiana; grandson of Willis C. and Sarah (Love) Wilmore, and of John and Frances (Smith) Jenkins, the former for many years was recorder of Randolph County, Ind. He is of English ancestry, the first members of the family settling near Lexington, Va., before the Revolutionary War, in which they participated. He was educated in the common schools of Randolph County and at Winchester high school, graduating in 1884; student at Perdue university, 1884-1888, receiving the degree of B. M. E. in the latter year. In 1891 he received the degree of M. E.; was instructor department of mathematics, Alabama polytechnic institute, 1888-1891; director, 1891-1895; professor mechanical engineering, 1895-1907; dean of engineering since 1907. WILSON, ALBERT HARRIS, teacher, for a number of years a resident of Alabama, was born February 4, 1872, at Saundersville, Sumner County, Tenn., son of Thomas Black and Lucy (Cragwall) Wilson, the former a captain in the C. S. Army. Mr. Wilson received his early education in the private schools of Tennessee; graduated at Vanderbilt university, B. S., 1892, and M. S., 1893; student at Johns Hopkins university, 1893-5, and Ph. D., Chicago university, 1911. He taught at Princeton university and the University of Illinois before coming to Alabama in 1905, where he became associate professor of mathematics at the Alabama polytechnic institute until 1910. In that year he removed to Haverford college, Haverford, Pa. Married: December 27, 1900, at Fort Worth, Tex., to Zue, daughter of Samuel Matthias and Woodie (Brown) Ward, of that place. Residence: Haverford, Pa.

WILSON, AUGUSTA JANE (EVANS), author, was born May 8, 1835, in Columbus, Ga., and died May 9, 1909, in Mobile; daughter of Matt Ryon and Sarah Skrine (Howard) Evans (q. v.). On account of delicate health she was educated in her home under the supervision of her mother. With her parents she removed to Texas, in 1846, where, under the influence of anti-Mexican sentiment, she wrote "Inez, a Tale of the Alamo," her first novel. She did not complete the work until after the family returned to Mobile in 1849. After the acceptance of "Inez," 1855, by Harper brothers, Miss Evans applied herself to profound study for four years, and then began her real literary work which made her the foremost Southern novelist of the period. Her book "Macaria" created great insubordination in the ranks of the Federal Army, in Tennessee, the soldiers smuggling the book through the lines, while the Federal officials forbade its reading and burned every copy obtainable. During the War of Secession she was active in the service of the Confederates, establishing a private hospital near Mobile; while the military camp, near that city, was named "Camp Beulah" in her honor. She raised $1,500 in Mobile and sent it to the women of Richmond, to assist in removing the Confederate dead to Hollywood cemetery. The popularity and financial results of her writings surprised and gratified her publishers as well as herself. Married: December 3, 1868, to Lorenzo Madison Wilson, business man, of Mobile, and lived for twenty-three years with him at Spring Hill, engaged in writing, farming, flower-culture and application of domestic science, until his death, in 1891, after which she removed to a house on Government street, where she resided until her death. Author: "Inez, a Tale of The Alamo," 1855; "Beulah," 1859; "Macaria," 1863; "St. Elmo," 1866; "Vashti," 1869; "Infelice," 1875; "At the Mercy of Tiberius," 1886; "A Speckled Bird," 1902; "Devota," 1907. Last residence: Mobile.

WILSON, BENJAMIN W., member of the constitutional convention, 1861, from Fayette County.

WILSON, E. P., member of the constitutional convention of 1901, from Washington County. Residence: Grove Hill, Clarke County.

WILSON, HENRY FELIX, real estate, stocks and bonds, was born April 23, 1837, in Pike County; son of Asa King and Delilah Pope (Speir) Wilson, the former a native of Robeson County, N. C., who removed to Pike County and settled on a farm near where Troy is now situated; grandson of Mathew and Sarah (King) Wilson, who lived in Pike County, and of Philip and Nancy (Pope) Speir of near Fayetteville, Cumberland County, N. C. The Wilson family was of Scotch-Irish origin, settled in North Carolina, adherents of the Revolutionary cause, and family tradition records that they "had much trouble with their Tory neighbors." They were all non-slave holding farmers. Mr. Wilson received his early education from his mother and later was taught by the Rev. Louis R. Barnes, a Baptist minister. In 1856 he went to Mobile and clerked in a cotton commission house until April 23, 1861, when he joined the "Mobile Rifles," which became Co. K, 3rd Alabama infantry regiment, C. S. Army; served four years as private and was paroled at Appomattox. He was one of four brothers in the Confederate Army, two of whom were killed, one at Shiloh and one at Spottsylvania Court House. After the war he returned to Mobile, where he became a member of the commission firm of Webster and Wilson. Later he removed to Birmingham and entered the real estate business and also dealt in stocks and bonds. He has been a notary public for fifty years. He was a member of the Ku Klux Klan, and is a Presbyterian. Married: December 14, 1865, at Uniontown, Perry County, to Mary Virginia, daughter of Robert and Maria (Gray) Clarke, who lived near Dayton. WINSTON, ANTHONY, soldier of the American revolution, was born November 15, 1750, and died in 1828; son of Anthony and Alice (Taylor) Winston; grandson of Isaac and Mary (Dabney) Winston, the former an immigrant, who died in Hanover County, Va., in 1760, leaving six children, and of James and Alice (Thornton) Taylor, of Carolina. "Slaughter's St. Marks Parish," states that "Isaac Winston, the most remote ancestor was born in Yorkshire, England in 1620, a grandson of his pursued his fortunes in Wales, where he had a large family. Three of his sons emigrated to America and settled near Richmond, Va., in 1704. Their names were William, Isaac and James." Anthony Winston was descended from Isaac. He was a member of the Virginia convention of 1775; afterwards served in the militia and rose to the rank of captain. Brewer says, "He was a colonial officer of 1776 and the owner of the celebrated Portuguese giant, Peter Francisco. Capt. Winston removed first to Tennessee and subsequently settled in Madison County, about the year 1810. He was a man of marked and elevated character." For some time he was sheriff of Buckingham County, Va. In 1801 he removed to Tennessee. Married: in 1776 to Keziah, daughter of John and Elizabeth (Walker) Jones, from Wales. The death of Captain Winston occurred in 1828, that of his wife in October 1826. They were buried at the family burying ground on the plantation of their son, Anthony Winston, about one mile from Tuscumbia, in Colbert County, in the direction of Sheffield. Children: 1. Anthony; 2. John Jones; 3. Edmund, died young; 4. William, died young; 5. Alice Taylor, m. John, son of John Pettus, Fluvanna County, Va.; 6. Joel Walker; 7. Isaac; 8. Mary Walker, m. Jesse Jones; 9. Betsey, died young; 10. Edmund (second of the name), b. June 15th, 1801, d. after the War of Secession; 11. Thomas. Last residence: Tuscumbia.

WINSTON, JOHN ANTHONY, planter, business man, legislator, soldier and governor of Alabama, was born September 4, 1812, in Madison County, and died December 21, 1871, in Mobile; son of William and Mary Bacon (Cooper) Winston; grandson of Anthony Winston (q. v.). He was educated in the schools of the day; at LaGrange college; and Nashville university, Tenn. In 1835 he engaged in planting in Sumter County, where he bought a large plantation and placed his slaves. He was elected to the house of representatives 1840 and 1842, and by his frankness and independence became a leader. In 1844 he became a member of the cotton commission house of John A. Winston and company, in Mobile, and continued in that business until 1871. In 1845 he was elected to the State senate, and was twice elected president of that body. He organized a company for service in the Mexican War in 1846, but did not see active service. In 1848 he was a delegate-at-large from Alabama to the Baltimore convention. The legislature of Alabama in 1849, sent him to Nashville where he took a firm stand against the proposed compromise in regard to Southern rights. He returned to the State senate in 1851, and became the leader of the Southern rights Democrats. In 1852 as an elector at large, he supported Franklin Pierce. He was elected governor of Alabama in 1853, the first native born Alabamian to fill that office, and in 1855, was re-elected over Hon. G. D. Shortridge, by 12,000 majority. He was bitterly opposed to the granting of favors to railroads, or to the expenditure of money, as long as the state was in debt. During his administration over thirty measures were vetoed, for which reason he has been called the "Veto Governor." On February 15, 1854, he approved the act which established a public school system in the state. In spite of his conflicts with the legislature he was very popular, and in 1858, the name of Hancock County, was changed to Winston in his honor. He was a delegate-at-large to the Charleston convention, 1860, and headed the Douglas ticket. In 1861, he was sent as a commissioner to Louisiana. Upon the outbreak of hostilities between the Union and the Seceding States he offered his services, and was appointed colonel of the 8th Alabama infantry regiment, C. S. Army. He commanded this regiment in the Peninsular campaign, and was in several other battles. At the battle of Seven Pines, when called on by the enemy to surrender, he replied that he "didn't join the army to surrender," that was "not his business there." Shortly afterward rheumatism and bronchitis forced him to resign from military duty and he returned to his plantation, giving all possible aid to the Confederate cause through counsel and financial aid. At the close of the war, he was elected to the Constitutional convention, of 1865, over Judge Dillard, and in 1867, was chosen as a U. S. senator over Gen. George S. Houston, but as he would not take the oath of allegiance to the Federate government, he was not allowed to take his seat, and soon afterward was disfranchised. In 1871, after a protracted illness, he died at his home in Mobile. Brewer said of him, p. 531, "Gov. Winston was in person tall and thin, and in his manhood's day was erect, active and sinewy. Energy, firmness, boldness, honesty, and common sense were his marked characteristics. As a soldier he was a stern disciplinarian, and not popular. But with men of all classes in the State he was a favorite, and no man ever held the confidence of the people in greater measure." Married: in 1832, near Huntsville, to Mary Agnes, daughter of Joel Walker and Agnes (Gibson) Jones. Children: 1. Mary Agnes, m. Thomas J. Goldsby (q. v.) Last residence: Mobile.

WINSTON, JOHN GADDIS, jr., lawyer, was born November 14, 1846, in Lebanon, De Kalb County; son of John Gaddis and Lucinda (Wilson) Winston, natives of Tennessee, the former removed in 1837 to De Kalb County with his family, in 1863 he located in Marshall County and during the administration of President Polk, he served as receiver of the land office, being at the time of his appointment a member of the legislature which position he resigned, and later in life engaged in planting; grandson of John Gaddis and Julia (Kenner) Winston, the former a farmer, a native of Tennessee and one of the early pioneers of Hawkins County, that state. He was of English origin, and on the maternal side of Irish extraction. He was reared on a farm; secured an elementary education in the country schools and attended the University of Virginia one year; soon afterward he engaged in teaching; from 1871 to 1874 he resided in Collinsville as a merchant; during 1874 and 1875 he lived in Texas; returning to Marshall County he farmed and studied law, being admitted to the bar in 1876; in January, 1883, he located at Gunter'sville where he has since resided practicing his profession, first with George W. Jones, later alone. He is a Mason; and a member of the Church of Christ. Married: September 14, 1871, to Elizabeth, daughter of Francis M. and Mary (Cowan) Kirby, natives of Alabama and Tennessee, respectively. Children: 1. Cora L.; 2. Tenny O.; 3. John Gaddis, deceased; 4. Frank Kirby; 5. Emma Lucy. Residence: Gunter'sville.

WINSTON, JOHN, NELSON, physician and planter, was born March 13, 1840, near Lebanon, DeKalb County; son of William Overton and Maria L. (Beene) Winston (q. v.). He was educated in the private and common schools of his native county, and was a student in 1859 at the University of North Carolina. In 1860, he entered the University of Virginia, but on account of the War of Secession did not finish the course. In 1865 he entered the medical department of the University of Louisville, Ky., where he graduated in 1866. Upon his admission to practice he opened an office at Valley Head where he has since resided. He is a Democrat; and a Presbyterian. Married: March 14, 1872, near Valley Head, to Kate, daughter of William and Palmira Chitwood, of that place. Her ancestors lived near Lebanon. Children: 1. William Overton, d. young; 2. WINSTON, WILLIAM OVERTON, lawyer, legislator, member two constitutional conventions, and railroad president, was born in 1804, in Fauquier County, Va., and died January 18, 1871, at Valley Head; son of John G. and ——— (Kenner) Winston, of the same family as Gov. John A. Winston. He removed in 1812, with his parents, to Hawkins County, Tenn., where he grew up, and received a good common school education. He read law at Rogersville, Tenn., under Peter Parsons, and was admitted to the bar in 1828, locating in 1838 in De Kalb County; from 1840-1844, he was a representative from that county in the legislature; from 1845 to 1853 solicitor of his judicial circuit, succeeding William Acklen; resigned that position to become president of the "Wills Valley Railroad," later a part of the Alabama and Chattanooga railroad system. He again, 1855, represented De Kalb in the legislature; and in 1856 was a Buchanan elector. He was a member of the constitutional conventions of 1861 and 1865 from De Kalb County. In 1865 he was sent to the State senate from Marshall and De Kalb Counties, and served two sessions. Married: a daughter of Hon. Jesse Beene, of Dallas County. Children: father of a large family, many of whom are very prominent, two of his sons were killed during the War of Secession. Last residence: Valley Head.

WOOD, FERN MANLY, lawyer, was born January 14, 1835, in Wayne County, N. C., and died March 15, 1877, at Opelika; son of James and Nancy (Byrd) Wood, the former a native of Wayne County, N. C., who moved to Alabama in 1830 and settled in Henry County; grandson of Ferryfold Wood, of North Carolina; great-grandson of Ferryfold Wood, who came from Ireland in 1730, and settled in North Carolina, whose three sons, William, James and Ferryfold, all fought as officers in the army of Gen. Nathaniel Greene, during the Revolution. He attended country schools, but was for the most part self-educated. He taught in the country schools for a year, then studied law under Gen. H. D. Clayton, at Clayton. He was admitted to the bar in 1855, and soon afterward formed a partnership with Gen. Clayton. He was appointed register in chancery at Clayton in 1856, and held that office until he joined the C. S. Army in 1862. He acted as quartermaster with the rank of major in Gen. Clayton's brigade, and served in that position until the end of the war. He resumed the practice of law at Clayton until 1867, when he was elected judge of the city court at Eufaula, and moved to that place. When the Central of Georgia railroad was built from Montgomery to Eufaula, he was appointed attorney of the road, and continued as such until he moved to Opelika in 1874. In 1877 he was appointed to codify the laws of the state of Alabama, and had just completed that work when he met his death. He was a Democrat; a Baptist; and a Knight of Honor. Married: December 21, 1858, in Barbour County, to Sarah Roquemore, sister of John D. Roquemore (q. v.); daughter of Zach and Julia Frances (McGiboney) Roquemore, of that county; granddaughter of James and Mary McGiboney, of Columbus, Ga., and of James and Elizabeth Roquemore, of Jones County, Ga. Children: 1. Byrdie, m. Reuben Alexander Mitchel; 2. Marie, m. William Albert Ham; 3. Fern Manly, m. Mary Baker Jones; 4. Charles, m. Mary Emma Hightower. Last residence: Opelika.

WOOD, GREEN MACK, planter, was born January 31, 1792, in Jefferson County, Ga., and died February 12, 1866, on his plantation near Danville, Montgomery County, Texas; son of Solomon and Elizabeth (Eason) Wood, natives respectively of England and of Wales, who settled first in North Carolina and later in Jefferson County, Ga.; the former held the rank of general during the Revolutionary War and was also active in the Indian Wars, died in Jefferson County August 17, 1815; the latter removed with her son, Green Wood, to Montgomery County, and is buried in the family burying ground on the plantation there. Her mother was a Miss Bentley. Gen. Wood's mother was a Miss Valentine. Mr. Wood was educated in his native state and removed to Montgomery County in 1817. His landed estate was extensive and he owned a large number of slaves. One of his daughters, Mrs. Douglas M. Campbell, of Houston, Tex., has written of these times as follows: "During the war my father's plantation was a very busy place, my mother having cloth woven and clothes made for the soldiers, as well as her own family, and the negroes, about two hundred on the plantation, and on Col. Powell's plantation, son-in-law of Maj. Wood, as he was in the army. My father was very busy providing all necessaries and raising everything on the plantation for soldiers' wives and children and widows all over the county. His plantation was called the 'Model farm,' for he was very systematic and methodical—raised sheep, horses and cattle and hogs, as well as diversity of crops and all kinds of fruit and melons. A carpenter and blacksmith shop were maintained in the place and pitch, tar and coal were made for all purposes. He was a most kind and humane master, a fine provider for all, and one of the best of neighbors. We had a governess, Miss Sarah L. Davis, of Batavia, N. Y., in our home for six years. My mother was a fine southern woman, a good entertainer, and always kept open house for friends and visitors. 'Marcus Warland' or the 'Long Moss Spring,' by Caroline Lee Hentz, was written after a visit in Alabama. She visited at my father's plantation, her husband being with her, and my father had the negroes give a 'ball' at their quarters for her benefit. She was a northern woman and had never known anything of southern plantation life. She was so delighted upon her return to the north she wrote this novel, and her negro characters were taken from several of my father's servants, and the story one of the South." Mr. Wood removed with his family to Montgomery County, Tex., in 1850. Married: February 28, 1822, near Wetumpka, at the home of her aunt, Mrs. Bolling Hall, to Evelina Alexander, daughter of Wm. and Navy (Abercrombie) Barnes, both of whom had died some years before in Hancock County, Ga., leaving orphaned besides Evelina, a younger daughter, Elizabeth, who married William Campbell of Montgomery, and a son, William, who died at the age of seven. Children: by a former marriage, an only child; 1. Green Mark, m. Mary Jane LeGrande, daughter of William C. and May Jane (Paul) LeGrande, granddaughter of Pierre LeGrande, a French Huguenot, who located in Richmond, Va., in 1700; 2. Bolling Hall; 3. Willis Breazeal, m. Sarah Ann Harris; 4. Nancy; 5. William Barnes, m. Cornelia Josephine Mitchell, Houston, Tex.; 6. Elizabeth Green, m. Robert Michael Powell, Texas; 7. Mary Evelina; 8. Seignora Eliza; 9. Ellen; 10. Joshua; 11. Campbell, m. Nannie Hall Mitchell, Austin, Texas; 12. Ella Abercrombie, m. Douglas M. Campbell, Texas. Last residence: Danville, Tex.

WOOLSEY, BENJAMIN MINTHORNE, lawyer, planter salt commissioner, was born in August, 1823, near Athens, Ga., and died August 19, 1886, at Selma; son of Abraham Minthorne and Emily Wingfield (Sims) Woolsey, who moved to Mobile in 1836, where the former died soon after. His father was a near relative of Dr. T. D. Woolsey, president of Yale University, and his mother, a native of Washington County, Ga., married Bishop James O. Andrews (q. v.), after the death of her first husband. Mr. Woolsey received his early education in Mobile, and was graduated from Emory college, Ga., when he was eighteen years old. He returned to Mobile, where he studied law, and was admitted to the bar, then took a course in law at Yale college. He opened an office in Mobile in 1844, but after practicing for two or three years was forced by declining health to give up his profession. In 1846 he moved near Selma, Dallas County, and until the last year of the War of Secession engaged extensively in planting in the country, and in a commission business in the city. He represented Dallas County in the State legislature in 1851 and again in 1855, and the following year was a presidential elector on the Fillmore ticket. A year later he declined the nomination of his party for congress, and in 1860 was a Bell and Everett elector. During the War of Secession Gov. Thomas H. Watts appointed him salt commissioner of the state, with the rank of colonel, in which capacity he served through the last two years of the war. A short time before the close of the war he moved with his family to Summerfield, for the purpose of educating his children and leaving them in a place of safety during his absence on the affairs of the Confederate government. After the war he returned to Selma and engaged in the cotton factorage and fire insurance business, in which he remained to the day of his death. Married: in Dallas County, to Lucinda, daughter of John Swift of that county. Children: 1. Susie Emily, deceased, m. Samuel Will John (q. v.); 2. St. George Lee d. unmarried; 3. Minthorne, m. WOOTEN, HARDY VICKERS, physician, was born December 13, 1813, at Waynesboro, Burke County, Ga., and died July 19, 1856, at Marysville, Tenn.; son of Eli and Ruth (Vickers) Wooten, the former who was born near Windsor, Bertie County, N. C., emigrated to Georgia and bought a tract of land between Louisville and Savannah, Ga., and whose father was a Virginian; grandson of Capt. John Vickers, a Revolutionary Whig, who was captain of a company that fought through the war, and at its close moved to Georgia. He was left an orphan in early life, and received his education in the common schools of his day and in the Augusta high school for boys. He entered the Augusta medical college, October 17, 1833, and after pursuing the course there, was graduated with highest honors. He then attended the medical course at the University of Pennsylvania, Philadelphia, where he was also graduated with honors. At the latter institution he submitted a thesis on "Malignant Cholera." Soon after his graduation he moved to Alabama, and engaged in the practice of medicine at Lowndesboro, where he resided at the time of his death, and where he had spent twenty years in active practice. He was a Whig, and opposed the dissolution of the union, but believed in States rights. He was a close friend of William L. Yancey. He wrote for the literary and medical journals of the day, and was author of an article on the "Diseases of the Black Belt," which was lost when Memphis capitulated, just before the close of the War of Secession. He also wrote essays and stories for the "Southern Literary Messenger," "The New Yorker," "The Augusta Mirror," and "The Magnolia," and was the author of a manuscript volume of poems. He was a Mason and an Odd Fellow. Dr. Wooten devoted his time almost exclusively to medicine and rose to a degree of eminence in the profession. He was repeatedly importuned to accept professorship in several prominent medical schools, but declined so doing until the fall of 1851, when he accepted the chair of practice in the Medical college of Memphis. He held that position for three years, when his health, enfeebled for some years, forced him to retire from his profession. He returned to Lowndes County in the fall of 1854 and died two years later in Marysville, Tenn. Married: January 24, 1841, in Lowndesboro, to Charlotte Rochelle, who died in 1885, daughter of George and Elizabeth Brown (Whitaker) Rochelle, who lived at Fairfield District, S. C., the former a Huguenot; granddaughter of James and Margaret (Evans) Rochelle, and of Thomas and Elizabeth Brown; great-granddaughter of Josiah and Margaret Evans, and of George Rochelle, who escaped from France after the Edict of Nantes, was shipwrecked, but rescued, and was a direct descendant of Count Dumont de Rochelle, for whom the town of Rochelle, France, was named. Children: 1. Garvin, deceased; 2. Rochelle, deceased; 3. Ella, m. Joseph Mark Howard, Lowndesboro; 4. Ida, deceased; 5. Zoe, deceased. Last residence: Lowndesboro.

Continental Line and Militia; enrolled on June 12, 1833, under act of Congress of June 7, 1832, payment to date from March 4, 1831; annual allowance, $480; sums received to date of publication of list, $1,200.—Revolutionary Pension Roll, in vol. xiv, Sen. doc. 514, 23rd Cong., 1st sess., 1833-34.

WRIGHT, DANIEL, member of the constitutional convention of 1819, from Lawrence County.

WRIGHT, E. M., educator; teacher in the State normal college, Troy, 1913.

WRIGHT, J. C., Baptist minister, for a number of years a resident of Alabama, was born December 10, 1830, in South Carolina. He came with his parents at an early age to Alabama; graduated from Howard college, 1856, and soon afterwards was licensed to preach. He served churches at Clinton, Greensboro and Gainesville; after the War of Secession resided on his farm in Calhoun County at the same time preaching in the nearby regions, later pastor of the Broad Street church, Mobile.

WRIGHT, JAMES WILLIAM ABERT, educator and horticulturist, was born July 28, 1834, at Columbia, Miss., and died August 25, 1894, at Talladega; son of Rev. David and Eliza (Abert) Wright, of Massachusetts, who came from Mississippi in 1820 as a missionary to the Choctaw Indians and arranged a grammar of the Choctaw language for use in his missionary schools, a recognized authority today, later organized in Columbus one of the first public schools in the South, afterward pastor of the Presbyterian church at Columbus, where he died in 1840. Professor Wright was the grandson of John Abert, a French soldier, who came with La Fayette and aided in establishing American independence, afterward settling in Virginia; and also nephew to Col. John J. Abert, topographical engineer, U. S. Army, and to Col. Charles H. Abert, C. S. Army. He was educated by his father, and later studied and taught under Prof. Henry Tutwiler of Greene Springs, who fitted him for Princeton university, where he graduated, in 1857, as valedictorian. Returning to Greene Springs he resumed his work as teacher in the Tutwiler school, until 1862, when he raised Co. H, 36th Alabama regiment infantry, C. S. Army, composed of a hundred and fifty men. This company fought at Chickamauga, Lookout Mountain, Missionary Ridge, to Atlanta, through Hood's campaign, serving at Spanish Fort, in the final defense of Mobile. He was wounded at Missionary Ridge, and being made prisoner, was sent to Nashville, and later to Camp Chase. While being transferred to Fort Delaware he jumped from a train and made his escape into Canada and, via the Bermuda Islands, arrived at home again where from 1856 to 1868 he was again associated with the Tutwiler school. In 1868 he removed to California where he engaged in farming and the insurance business, also doing journalistic and state grange work. In 1883 he returned to Alabama and resumed his connection with the Tutwiler school and in 1886 became associate principal of the Livingston normal college for girls, and the same year was made principal of that institution. He was a Democrat and Secessionist; a Mason; and a Presbyterian. Married: in August, 1859, at Greene Springs, to Margaret, daughter of Prof. Henry and Julia (Ashe) Tutwiler (q. v.), the former the founder of the Tutwiler school. Children: 1. Ruffin Ashe, surgeon, at the Alabama Bryce hospital, A. B., University of Alabama, M. D., 1889, University of Virginia, m. Kathleen Roulston, now of Mobile; 2. Willie, d. 1883; 3. Julius T., m. WRIGHT, JOHN T., major of the 8th Confederate cavalry regiment, C. S. Army.

WRIGHT, LOUIS J., druggist, was born January 31, 1861, in Roswell, Ga.; son of James A. and Elizabeth (Johnson) Wright. He was educated at the Roswell academy, Roswell, Ga. He removed to Alabama in 1879, locating in Gadsden, where he entered the drug business in 1885. In 1889, he removed to Talladega and has since that time continued his business there. He is a Mason. Married: April 14, 1891, to Lula G. Graham, of Talladega. Children: four, of whom one son and two daughters are now living. Residence: Talladega.

WRIGHT, MILTON R., physician, was born November 8, 1834, in Chester County, S. C.; deceased; son of Rufus W. and Annie (Gilchrist) Wright, the former of whom came to Alabama in 1835, and located in Calhoun County in 1837, living on his plantation five miles below Gadsden, on the Coosa River, for the rest of his days. He was reared on his father's plantation, and received a common school education. He taught for a few years, and in 1859 began the study of medicine at Atlanta. In October, 1862, he joined the first Alabama cavalry as assistant surgeon, and a few months later was transferred to the Thirty-first Alabama infantry. He remained with the army until the fall of 1864, when on account of ill health he was compelled to resign. He located in Etowah County and practiced medicine for a short time; resumed his medical studies soon afterward; and was graduated from the Alabama medical college, Mobile, M. D., 1870. He immediately located at Gadsden, and practiced his profession from that time until his death. He was a member of the State and County medical associations, serving as counsellor in the former; was a Baptist; and a Mason. Married: May, 1860, to Mary E. Bevins, daughter of Dr. Bevins. WRIGHT, WILLIAM H., banker, for a number of years a resident of Alabama, was born in 1827, in Lincoln County, Ga.; son of John and Elizabeth (Walker) Wright, the former at one time a member of the legislature of Georgia. He came to Bullock County at the age of twenty with his father and began farming, next became a clerk in the employ of Bedell and Lanier, later still entering into partnership with his brother-in-law, G. W. Campbell, banker. He enlisted, 1863, in the C. S. Army as a private in Wheeler's cavalry, was transferred to the ordnance department and rose to the rank of ordnance officer in Hannon's brigade. After the war, he returned to the store for a year and a half; spent five years as a manager of a farm near Union Springs; and in 1871 became manager of the Tuskegee railroad. He is a Democrat; and a Mason. Married: December, 1858, to Lucy, daughter of Alfred and Nancy Carter, of Butler County. There were born to this union ten children, seven of whom are living. Children: 1. Ida, m. S. B. Johnston; 2. George C.; 3. James C.; 4. Lorraine; 5. Inez; 6. Bessie; 7. Moses. Residence: Tuskegee.

WYETH, JOHN ALLAN, physician, was born May 26, 1845, at Missionary Station, Marshall County; son of Louis Weiss and Euphemia (Allan) Wyeth (q. v.). He attended the common school at Guntersville until he was sixteen years old, and in January, 1861, became a student at the LaGrange military academy, Franklin County, where he remained until the expiration of that year, when on account of the War of Secession, the school was closed. In 1862, when the Union troops occupied a portion of Alabama north of the Tennessee River, he joined a company of Independents, and took part in the attack on a U. S. gunboat in the Tennessee River, near Law's Landing. Later in that year, after the withdrawal of the Federal troops into middle Tennessee, he volunteered with Quirk's scouts, in Gen. John H. Morgan's cavalry, and served with that command in the winter of 1862 and 1863 in the expedition known as the "Christmas raid," which destroyed a number of important bridges and trestles on the Louisville & Nashville Railroad, and for weeks interrupted the Federal commander's communications with Louisville and the north. On that expedition, he took part in the engagements at Bear Wallow, Upton Station, Elizabethtown, Muldraugh's Hill, and Rolling Fork River. In May, 1863, he was regularly mustered into the service as a member of Co. I, Russell's Fourth Alabama cavalry, under Gen. Wheeler. He was detailed for special scouting duty in middle Tennessee, and on the retreat of Bragg's army to Chattanooga, took part in the engagement at Shelbyville, two separate engagements at the crossing of Elk River and at Winchester. On the night of September 14, 1863, on account of duty deemed extraordinarily hazardous, for which he volunteered and which involved passing through the right wing of the U. S. Army as a bearer of dispatches, he was granted an "unlimited leave of absence," which was declined. He participated in the battle of Chickamauga, and on the day after that battle, was in the running fight with the Federal cavalry which was driven into Chattanooga. With a picked body of cavalry selected by Gen. Wheeler to cut off the supplies intended for the U. S. Army then besieged behind the breastworks of Chattanooga, he crossed the Tennessee at Cottonport, and at Anderson's Cross Roads in the Sequatchee Valley, was with his regiment when it made one of the largest and most valuable captures of the War of Secession—a train of several hundred wagons loaded with commissary supplies and munitions of war. Following the retreating Federals twelve miles from the Confederate main column, with sixteen other members of this regiment he was captured by McCook's division of cavalry by which they were unexpectedly surrounded before they could return to their command. He spent sixteen months in captivity, fifteen of which were passed in the military prison at Camp Morton, Indiana, from which he was paroled for exchange in February, 1865. Arriving at Richmond, Va., on account of a severe attack of pneumonia, he was furloughed for sixty days, and at the expiration of this leave, while on the way to join his command which was then under Forrest near Marion, he took part in the engagement with Wilson's cavalry at Macon, Ga., in May, 1865, was surrendered with the garrison, but subsequently escaped.

After the war, he farmed in 1865 and 1866, and the next year began the study of medicine in Guntersville, under Dr. James M. Jackson, attending lectures at the medical department of the University of Louisville, from which he was graduated in 1869. He began to practice medicine in Guntersville, April, 1869, and in June of that year, moved to Arkansas, where he was engaged as a physician and surgeon to a railroad construction company operating in that state. A year later, he temporarily abandoned professional work, and for two years, engaged in steamboating and in contract work on the White River. In that period of time he erected a large public building for the county of Woodruff, Ark., which was completed in May, 1872, when he moved to New York City to complete his studies and to resume the practice of his profession. In October, 1872, he entered Bellevue Medical college, and in March, 1873, received the degree of M. D. from that institution. In April, 1873, he was appointed assistant demonstrator of anatomy in Bellevue hospital medical college, and the next year was made prosector to the chair of anatomy, and one of the instructors in the faculty of that college. He resigned from that position in 1876 on account of severe illness, and visited the medical centers of Europe. In 1880, he was appointed visiting surgeon to Mt. Sinai Hospital, and consulting surgeon to St. Elizabeth's Hospital, New York City. In 1881, he organized and became senior professor of surgery in and later president of the faculty of the New York Polyclinic Medical School and Hospital, which institution was formally opened in 1882, and introduced postgraduate medical instruction in the United States. He has continued to hold that position since that time. He was elected president of the New York Pathological Society in 1885 and 1886; was elected first vice president of the American Medical Association in 1893, and president in 1901; president of the New York State Medical Association, 1900; of the New York Academy of Medicine, 1907-1908; and of the New York Southern Society, 1907. The degree of LL. D. was conferred upon him by the University of Alabama in 1902, and by the University of Maryland, 1909.

Dr. Wyeth is author of a "Handbook of Medical and Surgical References," 1875; an essay on "Dextral Preference in Man," 1875; a "Monograph on Minor Surgery," 1876. In that same year he was awarded the Bellevue Alumni Association prize for the "best essay on any subject connected with surgery or surgical pathology," his subject being, "Amputation at the Ankle Joint." In 1878, he was awarded the first prize of the American Medical Association for an essay on "The Surgical Anatomy and Surgery of the Carotid Arteries," and received the second prize of the same association, 1878, for an essay on "The Surgical Anatomy and Surgery of the Innominate and Subclavian Arteries." At that same time, he published an essay on "The Obturator Arteries and the Importance of their Relation to Hernia," and later a pamphlet on "Supra-public Cystotomy with a report of sixty cases;" an "Osteo-plastic Operation for the Correction of Deformities of the Alveolar Arch and for Cleft Palate and Hare Lip;" "The Removal of the Lower Jaw from within the Mouth without External Incision;" an essay on "The Surgical Treatment of Aneurisms of the Arch of the Aorta, Innominate, Subclavian and Carotid Arteries by the Distal Ligature;" and "Original Researches on the Occlusion of Arteries by Cell-proliferation." In 1895, he delivered an oration on "J. Marion Sims and his Work," before the Southern Surgical and Gynecological Association at Washington, D. C., and an address on "Medical Education" before the Mississippi Valley Medical Association at Louisville, Ky., 1890. In 1886, he published the first edition of his "Text Book on Surgery," which has passed through several subsequent editions. In 1890, he made public his method of "Bloodless Amputation at the Hip Joint and at the Shoulder Joint."

In 1901, at St. Paul, Minn., he delivered the "Oration on Surgery" before the American Medical Association, and the "President's Address" before the association at Saratoga, N. Y., in 1902. In 1903, at New Orleans, La., he announced "a new method of curing otherwise inoperable tumors by the injection into their substance of boiling water." Among his contributions to other than professional literature are an article in the Century Magazine for April, 1901, entitled "Cold Cheer in Camp Morton," a narrative of prison life from October, 1863, to February, 1865; "The Struggle for Oregon," an historical sketch, Harper's Magazine, 1892; "General Wheeler's Leap, a sketch of the Battle of Shelbyville, June 27, 1863," Harper's Weekly, 1898; a series of articles on "General Forrest at Fort Donelson;" "The Capture of Colonel A. D. Streight and his Entire Command;" "The Storming of Fort Pillow;" "Forrest at Brice's Cross Roads," Harper's Magazine, 1899; "Narrative of a Scouting Expedition in 1863," Confederate Veteran, November, 1900; "Life of General Nathan Bedford Forrest," Harper & Brothers, 1899; and "With Sabre and Scalpel, the Autobiography of a Soldier and Surgeon," 1914.

Married: April 10, 1886, to Florence Nightingale Sims, daughter of the eminent surgeon, J. Marion Sims. Children: 1. Florence Wyeth; 2. Marion Sims; 3. John Allan, jr. Residence: New York, N. Y.

WYETH, LOUIS WEISS, lawyer, was born June 20, 1812, at Harrisburg, Dauphin County, Pa., and died at Guntersville, July 7, 1889; son of John and Louisa (Weiss) Wyeth, the former a native of Cambridge, Mass., who went to Philadelphia when he was twenty-one years old and worked in a printing office, sailed to San Domingo where he edited a Republican newspaper until the outbreak of the insurrection, returned to Philadelphia and later went to Harrisburg, Pa., where he established and published the "Oracle of Dauphin," the first newspaper ever printed in Harrisburg, was a printer of books, was first postmaster appointed at Harrisburg, his commission being signed by George Washington, retired from business in 1826, and returned to Philadelphia where he spent the remainder of his life; grandson of Ebenezer and Mary (Winship) Wyeth, of Cambridge, Mass., the former a farmer, who served as selectman for seven years between 1781 and 1790, and was a soldier in Capt. Samuel Thatcher's company in Col. Gardner's regiment, and fought at Concord Bridge, in which fight there were five Wyeths out of a company of seventy-five men, and of Wilhelm Ludwig and Joanna Mary (Pfuger) Weiss, who lived at Philadelphia and Bethlehem, Pa., the former who was chaplain to the Grand Duke of Hesse-Darmstadt, Germany, and was removed from his office by the grand duke because of his espousal of the Moravian doctrine, came to America, and settled in Philadelphia, where he held the office of notary public and was for many years employed as translator of foreign papers and languages; great-grandson of Ebenezer and Susannah (Hancock) Wyeth; great-great-grandson of John and Deborah (Ward) Wyeth; great-great-grandson of Nicholas Wyeth, the founder of the family, who came from England and settled near Boston, Mass., about the time the Winthrop colony arrived in America, who in 1645 bought a house and land in Cambridge, Mass., which for over two centuries remained in the possession of the family. One branch of the family settled in Virginia, taking Wythe as their name. That branch became extinct with George Wythe, signer of the Declaration of Independence.

Judge Wyeth was educated in the common schools of Harrisburg, Pa., and attended the law school at Carlisle, Pa. He was admitted to the bar at Carlisle, in 1833, and later in that year located at Harrisburg in the practice of his profession. He moved to Alabama, and began the practice of law at Guntersville, Marshall County, in March, 1836, and continued at that place until he retired in 1885. In 1837, he was appointed county judge by the governor, and was afterward elected to that office by the legislature for a term of six years. He held the office for six months, then resigned in order to resume his practice. He was elected to the State legislature in 1847, and served one term. He was opposed to secession, but after Alabama joined the Confederacy, gave all his support to the cause. He volunteered as a private in Capt. Gilbreath's Company from Marshall County, but being over conscript age, was discharged at Nashville, Tenn., as physically unfit for service. After his home was burned by Sherman's troops, the family went to Georgia, and when the militia of that state was called out, he again enrolled, and went to the front at Atlanta in 1864. In 1865 and 1866, when the people of Marshall, Blount, Dekalb and Morgan Counties were in great distress for food, and some had died from starvation, Judge Wyeth went to Nashville, Louisville, and Cincinnati, and applied for help for the starving people. Train load after train load was donated and sent free of charge to Decatur and Guntersville, where he established a depot from which the neighboring counties were fed until a plentiful crop was gathered. In 1874, Judge Wyeth was elected judge of the fifth judicial circuit, in which capacity he served for two terms and refused a third election. Later he declined the appointment by the governor to the position of chief justice of the supreme court of Alabama. He was president of the Tennessee & Coosa Railroad, and a director in the Wyeth City Land Company. Wyeth City, Marshall County, was named in his honor. He was a Democrat, a Presbyterian and a Mason. Married: in 1838, in Huntsville, to Euphemia Allan, who was born in Sumner County, Tenn., and died December 27, 1895, in Guntersville, daughter of Rev. John and Nancy (Hodge) Allan, the former a native of Hertford, England, who emigrated to America in 1804, settled at Athens, Ga., was graduated from the University of Georgia in 1807, taught school in Tennessee and Kentucky, was ordained a minister, and was pastor of the First Presbyterian church of Huntsville; granddaughter of David and Mary (Knight) Allan, the former a native of Ayr, Scotland, who moved to Dorset, England, where he was married, and of Joseph Hodge, an Englishman, who served in the Continental Army under Gen. Greene, was severely wounded at the battle of Guilford Court House, and in 1782 married Euphemia Agnew, daughter of the surgeon who restored him to health. Children: 1. Mary, m. Hugh Carlisle; 2. Louisa, m. William H. Todd; 3. John Allan (q. v.). Last residence: Guntersville.

WYLY, JOHN McGEHEE, business man, was born at Jacksonville, July 7, 1837; son of Benjamin Cleveland and Anna Maria (McGehee) Wyly, the former of whom was born in Georgia and came to Alabama in 1832, settling in Calhoun County, becoming a well known farmer and at one time sheriff of his county. He was educated at the Kentucky military institute, Frankfort; returned to Jacksonville where he took up his study of law, but soon turned his attention to farming. He enlisted as a private, 1861, in Co. G, 10th Alabama infantry regiment, C. S. Army, was promoted at the end of a year to first lieutenant and assigned to the staff of Gen. John M. Forney, as aide-de-camp, later becoming major under Gen. E. Kirby Smith. After the war he again took up farming but after a two years' struggle he turned his attention to railroading; took a position with the Selma, Rome and Dalton railroad as traveling freight agent and rapidly rose to the ranks of general agent for the system in Eastern Alabama. He was an Episcopalian; and a Mason. Married: October 31, 1858, to Amelia C., daughter of Jacob Forney (q. v.). Children: 1. Annie M., m. David F. Lowe, Montgomery; 2. Benjamin F., m. Ella Peck, of Atlanta; 3. Henry Forney; 4. Sadie S., m. Mac Billing (q. v.); 5. George M.; 6. Nora C. Last residence: Montgomery.

WYMAN, WILLIAM STOKES, educator, was born November 23, 1830, in Montgomery, and died October 20, 1915; son of Justus and Mary Amelia (Stokes) Wyman, the former a native of Woburn, Mass., of Puritan stock, who moved to Alabama before the state was admitted to the Union, settled in Claiborne, Monroe County, in 1818, and in 1822, moved to Montgomery, where he became an influential merchant, the latter a member of the Stokes family of North Carolina; grandson of Benjamin Wyman of Woburn, Mass.; and a descendant of Francis Wyman, who with his brother, John, came from Hertford County, England, and settled at Woburn, Mass., in the seventeenth century. He attended Harvard University, 1847-1848; was graduated with first honor from the University of Alabama, A. B., 1851, and A. M., 1853; and received the degree of LL. D. from that institution in 1882. In 1852, he became a member of the faculty of the University of Alabama, and remained there until 1902. He served as tutor of Latin and Greek, 1852-1855; professor of Latin, 1856-1860; professor of Latin and Greek, 1860-1865; representative in the State legislature, 1870-1872; professor of Latin in the university, 1872-1901; and president of the institution, 1901-1902. Prior to his acceptance of the presidency, he had been offered and had declined that position six times, and had, four times, served as president pro tem. Dr. Wyman was a student of the history of the Southeastern and Gulf States in the original sources, and was considered the leading authority of the state on Indian history and linguistics. He made a specialty of early exploration and settlement, and the history of the aboriginal and Indian inhabitants of the state. His collections embrace practically all early French, Spanish and other works, either in the originals or translations, bearing on the Southern country and the Indians, and includes a number now out of print and exceedingly rare. He was author of "Syntax of the Latin Compound Sentence," 1880; "The Trial of Milo," 1885; and was a contributor to the Knickerbocker Magazine, Century Magazine, New York Nation, Magazine of American History, and others. Dr. Wyman was a member of Phi Beta Kappa fraternity.

WYNNE, EMMA MOFFETT, author, was born September 5, 1844, in Alabama. During her early life she removed with her father, Maj. Moffett, to Columbus, Ga. She received her early education under private instructors, graduated from Patapsco institute, Baltimore, Md., and also studied at Spingler institute, New York City. She has written many poems but is best known as the author of the novels "Crag-Font," 1867, and "Crown Jewels." Married: in 1864, to Major V. W. Wynne, of Tennessee.

WYNNE, WILLIAM B., real estate broker, was born October 2, 1820, in Greenville District, S. C., deceased; son of Thomas and Mary (Benson) Wynne, natives, respectively, of Virginia and South Carolina, the former who was an officer in the War of 1812, a planter, who emigrated to Georgia in 1826; grandson of Maj. Thomas Benson, of Revolutionary fame, who married into the Prince family, for whom old Fort Prince was named. The Wynne family came originally from Wales and settled in Virginia in colonial times. The Bensons are of Saxon origin. Mr. Wynne was reared on his father's farm, and attended the neighborhood schools. He was employed as a salesman in a mercantile establishment at Anderson, S. C., for four years, and on his father's death in 1830, returned to Georgia, and for two years peddled merchandise about the country. At the end of that time, he engaged in merchandising in partnership with his brother, at Pine Mountain, Ga. Later he moved to Franklin, Ga., and in 1845, to Alabama, where he engaged in mercantile business at Jacksonville, until 1850. In that year he moved to Etowah, and carried on a mercantile business at two or three places. In 1857 he located at Gadsden and conducted his business in partnership with Col. R. B. Kyle, until the beginning of the War of Secession. During the war, he established a tannery, which he conducted until 1867; was in the mercantile business in New York City, 1868-1876; moved to Atlanta, Ga., where he merchandised, 1876-1885; was engaged in manufacturing wire fence in Birmingham, 1885;

YANCEY, BENJAMIN CUDWORTH, lawyer, U. S. minister to the Argentine republic, was born April 27, 1817, at Charleston, S. C., and died October 24, 1891, at Rome, Ga.; son of Benjamin Cudworth and Caroline (Bird) Yancey, of Charleston, S. C., the former who served as midshipman on board the Constellation, under Commodore Truxton, and was present and bore a part in the engagement in 1789, between her and the French frigates, L'Insurgente and La Vengeance, in which the former was captured and the latter escaped in the night after having struck her colors, who resigned after peace with France, studied law in Baltimore, Md., and in Laurens District, S. C., practiced law in Abbeville, was a member of the South Carolina legislature in 1810, 1811, 1812, and 1813, and was aide to Gov. Alston with the rank of colonel; grandson of James Yancey, who fought for independence with the Virginia forces, going to South Carolina with Gen. Greene, and after the Revolution married Miss Cudworth of Charleston, a descendant of the Massachusetts family of Cudworths, and of William and Catherine (Dalton) Bird; great-grandson of Lewis Davis Yancey, who settled a landed estate in Culpeper County, Va., about the middle of the seventeenth century, and who was a son of one of the pioneers, four brothers, Charles, William, Joel and Robert Yancey, who came from Wales to Virginia in 1642. He was a relative of "Charles of Buckingham," one of the Virginia Yanceys, who owned a large landed estate and was for thirty years in public life; of Maj.-Gen. Robert Emmett Rhodes of the C. S. Army; and of Bartlett Yancey, a North Carolina congressman and a man of public affairs.

Mr. Yancey attended Mt. Zion academy, Hancock County, Ga., and the Academy schools at Troy, N. Y. He was graduated with honor from the University of Georgia, A. B., 1836, and from the Yale law school, B. L., 1837. Moving to Alabama, he was appointed master in chancery, 1838, by Chancellor Crinshaw, for the counties of Dallas, Perry, Greene, Marengo, Sumter, Wilcox and Lowndes. In 1840, with his brother, William Lowndes Yancey (q. v.), he was co-editor of the Wetumpka "Gazette." Forced by illness to leave Alabama, he settled at Hamburg, S. C., practiced law from 1841 to 1851, and was for several terms a member of the legislature of that state. In 1851, declining the nomination to congress, he moved to his plantation on the Coosa River, Cherokee County, and in 1855, was elected to the State senate, over which body he was shortly afterward chosen to preside. He became minister resident to the Argentine Confederation by appointment of President Buchanan, 1858, and because of a proclamation issued by the president of the Argentine Confederation for the decree of death against all captains of foreign vessels, who should take their ships into the port of Buenos Ayres, and then land at any part of the general government, Mr. Yancey, as U. S. minister, filed a vigorous protest and called upon the naval force of the United States to resist the decree. Other powers concurred in his protest, and the decree was not enforced. Subsequently, Mr. Yancey was selected by the contending states as arbiter of their differences, and shortly after he had left the country, President Urquiza's message to congress contained this compliment, "All Argentine owe the young American minister a debt of gratitude which they cannot repay."

Returning to the United States, December, 1859, Mr. Yancey declined a tender from the president, through Secretary Cass, of the appointment as minister resident to the court of St. James. He entered the C. S. Army in 1861, as captain of the Fulton Dragoons, and was shortly afterward appointed major of Cobbs Legion. He participated in the Virginia campaign, but was subsequently transferred, as colonel, to Georgia in command of state troops. He served as trustee of the University of Georgia, 1860-1886; was president of the Georgia State Agricultural Society, 1867-1871; represented Clark County in the Georgia legislature for one term and declined re-election; and moved to his country home in Floyd County, Ga., where he spent the last few years of his life in superintending his planting interests. Married: (1) at Sparta, Ga., to Laura Hines, who died soon afterward; (2) in November, 1847, at Athens, Ga., to Sarah Paris Hamilton, daughter of Col. Thomas Napier Hamilton, and granddaughter of Capt. James Hamilton of the Virginia colonial army. Children, by first marriage: 1. Caro, m. Dr. Hugh H. Harris, son of Sampson W. Harris, congressman from Alabama, children, Sallie, Yancey, Hugh, Pauline, and Mary Belle; by second marriage: 2. Hamilton (q. v.); 3. Mary Lou, m. Mr. Phinizy, children, Bowdre, Hallie, and Mary Lou. Last residence: Floyd County, Ga.

YANCEY, BENJAMIN CUNNINGHAM, lawyer and planter, was born July 30, 1836, at Greenville, S. C., and died March 19, 1909, at Umatilla, Fla.; son of William Lowndes and Sarah Caroline (Earle) Yancey (q. v.). He graduated from the University of Alabama, B. A., 1856, after a two years' course, and in the Law school of Lebanon, Tenn. He began the practice of law with his father in Montgomery. After the war, along with numerous other Southerners, he went to Brazil where he lived about thirteen years. He returned to the United States, located in Florida, and engaged in planting and the culture of oranges. He was captain of artillery in the regulars of the C. S. Army, stationed at Fort Morgan, was afterward on detached duty, commanded a battalion of skirmishers in Deas' brigade, commanding it in the battle of Murfreesboro. He was a Democrat, and a Presbyterian. Married: June, 1873, at Santa Barbara, Brazil, to Lucy Cairnes, daughter of William Hervey and Catherine (Ives) Hall, who had lived at Columbus and Gainesville, Ga. Children: 1. William Lowndes, m. Katherine Belle Ursoil, Umatilla, Fla.; 2. George Earle, m. Annie Mathews, Rio de Janeiro, Brazil; 3. Hervey Hall, m. Maude L. Green, Jacksonville, Fla.; 4. Goodloe Dupree, m. Mary Peterson, Umatilla, Fla.; 5. Lucy Dillingham, m. Joseph W. Fuller, Columbus, Ga.; 6. Frederick Dalton, unmarried. Last residence: Umatilla, Fla.

YANCEY, DALTON HUGER, lawyer, was born February 13, 1845, at Greenville, S. C.; son of William Lowndes and Sarah Caroline (Earle) Yancey (q. v.); brother of Benjamin Cunningham Yancey (q. v.); and nephew of Benjamin Cudworthy Yancey (q. v.). He obtained his early education in the private schools of Montgomery; spent one year at Franklin College, near Tusculumbia; and two years at the University of Alabama, leaving there in the early spring of 1863 to join the C. S. Army. He served as captain of Co. K, Seventh Alabama cavalry, from the spring of 1863 to the summer of 1864, when he resigned and served through the remainder of the war with Capt. Thomas Henderson's Scouts, under Forrest. He was transferred in the early spring of 1865, to Gen. Allen's cavalry regiment, and was on his way there, when Lee surrendered. After the war was over, he entered the law department of the University of Georgia, and was graduated during the winter of 1866. He practiced law three or four years at Cusseta, Chattahoochee County, Ga., and for about three years in Florida, first at Favares, Lake County, then at Tampa. He was county judge of Lake County, Fla., 1887-1888, and State senator, 1889-1891. During the session of the legislature in 1889, he was a member of the judiciary committee, and chairman of the city and county organization committee, which latter committee reported favorably what is known as "House Bill No. 4," the bill which abolished the charter of the city of Jacksonville, and substituted commission government. In the session of 1891, Mr. Yancey was elected leader and manager of the campaign of Senator Wilkinson Call. He was chief of the division of interest, expense and warrants in the U. S. treasury department, office of the register of the treasury, at Washington, D. C., 1893-1894; and was U. S. special agent at Tampa, Fla., 1895-1896. He is now located at Washington, D. C. He is a Democrat, a trustee in the Methodist Episcopal church, south; and a Mason. Married: October 9, 1869, at Cusseta, Ga., to Hattie Leonora McCook, daughter of Wright and Ruhamah McCook, of Cusseta, Ga. Children: 1. Ella Bird, m. John Dillon Hall, Tensas; 2. Sarah Ruhamah, m. YANCEY, HAMILTON, lawyer, was born September 27, 1848, in Edgefield District, S. C.; son of Benjamin Cudworth and Sarah P. (Hamilton) Yancey (q. v.). He was principally reared and educated at Athens, Ga.; was graduated from the University of Georgia, A. B., 1868, B. L. and A. M., in 1870, and took a literary course at the University of Virginia. He located in Rome, Ga., in 1871, and practiced law throughout the Rome circuit and in the chancery courts of Alabama with success until 1887, when he retired from active practice to enter the management of the Rome Fire Insurance Company, and later the Commercial Union Assurance Company of England for several of the Southern states. He is also largely interested in agricultural pursuits. During his professional career, he was solicitor of the county court and attorney of the city of Rome. He was alternate Democratic elector on the Tilden and Hendricks ticket. During the case of Mitchell vs. the City of Rome, Mr. Yancey elicited the unusual compliment from the supreme court of Georgia, of having his brief adopted, in part, as a decision of the court.

He has been a life member of the Georgia State Agricultural Society since 1871; served as alderman of East Rome, Ga., for several years; and is a Methodist. Married: April 29, 1874, to Florence Marsh Patterson, daughter of Dr. Robert M. Patterson, of Macon, Ga. Children: 1. Julia Marsh, deceased; 2. Benjamin Cudworth; 3. Robert P.; 4. Thomas Hamilton; 5. YANCEY, JOHN LEWIS, real estate and fire insurance, was born December 1, 1859, in Giles County, Tenn.; son of Rufus Parham and Martha Jane (Parker) Yancey, the former born at Buffalo Lithia Springs, Mecklenburg, Va., removed to Giles County, where he taught for twenty-five years, and was for seven years county surveyor, and in 1893, located in Birmingham, where he died, January 3, 1909; grandson of Lewis Nelson and Letha (Worsham) Yancey, of Mecklenburg County, Va., and Hardin and Giles Counties, Tenn., and of Alfred Washington and Delilah (Wood) Parker, of Giles County; great-grandson of Richard and Mary (Walton) Yancey, the former, and his father and grandfather, living and dying in Mecklenburg County; great-great-grandson of Robert Yancey; and great-great-great-grandson of Richard Yancey. He received his early education from his father. He was a merchant at Wales, Giles County, from 1881 to 1887, when he moved to Birmingham, where he engaged in the business of real estate and fire insurance. He is a Methodist. Married: February 23, 1892, at Huntsville, to Mattie Ellen, daughter of Alexander M. and Martha (Ward) Wynn, of that place, the former a native of Dinwiddie County, Va., granddaughter of John H. T. Wynn, who about 1830 removed from Dinwiddie County, Va., to Limestone County, and of Samuel Ward, and wife, a Miss Thompson, who married in Albermarle County, Va., and at once came to Madison County, and great-granddaughter of John Ward, of Albermarle County. No children. Last residence: Birmingham.

YANCEY, WILLIAM EARLE, business man, was born November 4, 1843, at Wetumpka; son of William Lowndes and Sarah Caroline (Earle) Yancey (q. v.). He obtained primary and preparatory education in the private schools of Montgomery, and in a boarding school at Oak Bowery; attended school at Auburn; passed through freshman year in Oglethorpe university, Georgia; appointed to the Naval academy at Annapolis, from which he resigned on the day of the secession of Alabama from the Union; entered the University of Alabama, 1861, remaining until 1862, when he left to join the C. S. Army. After the war for about fourteen years he was engaged in farming, then for several years in merchandising, built and managed cotton seed oil mill at Talladega; in 1886 entered mercantile business in Birmingham, and since 1901 he has been with the Republican iron and steel co., of Birmingham. For a time he was postmaster at Talladega Springs. After leaving college, in 1862 he was named senior 2nd Lieutenant, Co. E, 40th Alabama infantry regiment, promoted captain, served in Vicksburg campaign, was wounded in siege of the city; as brigade inspector was on staff of Gen. Alpheus Baker in the campaigns of 1864. He was district organizer, Knights of the Golden Rule, 1886. He is a Democrat, and a Methodist. Married: November 8, 1864, in Montgomery, to Mary Louise, daughter of Maj. William Lewis and Virginia (Armistead) Lanier, the former born March 10, 1810, in Prince George County, Va., great-great-granddaughter of Thomas and Jane (Washington) Lanier, the latter the aunt of Gen. Washington. Maj. Lanier was an officer in Gen. Lovell's army in New Orleans, left with the army when it evacuated the city, went to Montgomery, where he bought the home of Wm. L. Yancey, and was president of the railway from Selma to York until his death. Children: 1. Virginia Caroline, m. Alexis Faulkner Besson, resides in East Orange, N. J.; 2. Ella Earle, m. YANCEY, WILLIAM LOWNDES, lawyer, orator, and political leader, was born August 10, 1814, at the Falls of Ogeechee, Ga., died July 28, 1863, near Montgomery, and is buried in Oakwood cemetery; son of Benjamin Cudworth and Caroline (Bird) Yancey, the former a midshipman in the Federal navy who acquitted himself with honor in two naval engagements of the "Constellation," resigned, entered the law office of Robert Goodloe Harper, in Baltimore, Md., and later in an office in South Carolina, with John C. Calhoun and George Bowie opened an office in partnership, in Abbeville, S. C., served as a member of the state legislature, 1812, a member of the judiciary committee, removed to Charleston, S. C., forming a partnership with Judge Daniel E. Huger, and dying at the early age of thirty-four; brother of Benjamin Cudworth Yancey, lawyer of Cahaba, removed to South Carolina, returned to Alabama, located in Cherokee County, president of State senate, 1855, resigned, located in Athens, Ga., minister to Argentine confederation, in 1858; grandson of William and Katherine (Dalton) Bird, the former of Birdsboro, Pa., later of Alexandria, Va., who established probably the first iron works in Georgia, which were built at Ogeechee Falls, in Warren County, and who lived at "Aviary" in Hancock County, Ga., and of Maj. James Yancey and wife, who was a Miss Cudworth, of Charleston, S. C., the former a corporal in General Greene's army during the Revolution, and who after the war settled in western South Carolina where he practiced law; great-great-grandson of Lewis Davis and Mildred (Kavanaugh) Yancey, the former settled in Culpeper County, Va., about 1710, son of one of the four Welchmen, Charles, William, Joel and Robert Yancey, who came to Virginia in 1642, with Sir William Berkley, and settled in the James River region, and of William Bird, an Englishman, who founded Birdsboro, Pa.; great-great-great-grandson of Charles Kavanaugh, of Irish parentage, who lived in Culpeper County, Va. William L. Yancey was educated at Mount Zion academy, Hancock County, Ga., later after his mother's marriage to Rev. Nathan S. S. Beman, head of the academy, he removed with his mother and step-father to Troy, N. Y., and attended the academies of Troy, Bennington, Chitteningo, and Lenox. He entered Williams college, Mass., but did not graduate on account of the limited resources of his step-father. He then took up the study of law in the office of Nathan Sayre, of Sparta, Ga., and later in the office of Gov. B. F. Perry, of Greenville, S. C. He did not begin the practice of law, but engaged in planting near Greenville, and later edited the "Greenville Mountaineer." He removed his family to Alabama about the year 1836, engaged in planting in Dallas County, and also edited the "Cahaba Democrat" for a time. In 1839 he removed to Wetumpka, then in Coosa County and edited the "Argus" in connection with his brother. While residing at that place he was admitted to the bar and entered into a partnership with S. W. Harris. In 1841 he was elected to the house from Coosa and in 1843 was elected to the senate over W. W. Morris, resigning in 1844 to canvass for the seat in congress made vacant by the resignation of Dixon H. Lewis. He was successful in this contest, and was again elected in 1845, but resigned in 1846, to enter into a law partnership with Capt. J. A. Elmore, of Montgomery, and in 1848 was a delegate to the Democratic convention at Baltimore. He withdrew during the convention as he was dissatisfied with the platform of principles adopted. This move had a damaging effect upon the party and also modified his relations to it for a time, but in 1856 all dissensions had been quieted and he was delegated to the State convention of his party. He introduced the same resolutions in 1856 that were ignored in 1848 and they were not only adopted, but were acknowledged at the Cincinnati nominating convention, at which he was a delegate. He also headed the Buchanan ticket in 1856, and a canvass was made in his behalf, in 1859, for United States senator, in opposition to Governor Fitzpatrick, but the election was called off. The State Democratic convention assembled in the winter of 1859 in order to provide for representation in the Charleston convention and he again presented resolutions instructing the Alabama delegates to withdraw from the nominating convention at Charleston if their demands were rejected. Mr. Yancey was placed at the head of the delegation and upon the failure to adopt his resolutions, the convention split, resulting in the formation of another party, which was fully consummated in June, 1860, at the Baltimore convention. At the Constitutional convention in 1861 he was the chairman of the committee which reported on the ordinance to dissolve the union between the State of Alabama and other states under the compact "The constitution of the United States of America." Mr. Yancey's was the master spirit of this convention. He took an active part in all of the proceedings and debates and was outspoken in the fact that he did not favor dis-union save as a refuge from dishonor and subsequent ruin to the South. After the organization of the Confederate States government he was appointed by President Davis as a commissioner to England and France to procure recognition from these governments. He returned in the summer of 1862 after having failed in his mission and told his countrymen plainly that they must rely on their own efforts entirely to achieve that result. During his absence he had been almost unanimously elected to a seat in the Confederate States senate, and soon after his return took his seat in Richmond. He occupied that position at the time of his death. Married: August 13, 1835, near Greenville, S. C., to Sarah Caroline, daughter of George Washington and Elizabeth R. (Earle) Earle, the former a planter and slave owner of Greenville County, S. C.; granddaughter of John and Thomasine (Prince) Earle, and of Col. During the summer of 1886 he took a summer course in Hebrew at the University of Virginia and took the three year theological course at Princeton, N. J., graduating in 1889 with the B. D. degree. In 1919 the honorary degree of D. D. was conferred upon him by King college. He was ordained on the fourth Sabbath of July, 1889, in the Third Presbyterian church, Birmingham, installed pastor of that church the same day and has remained in that position continuously to the present time, a term of thirty-two years. In addition to his pastoral duties he frequently holds services in shops, factories, and fire stations, in the day and at night. Dr. Bryan has been moderator of the Presbytery of North Alabama and also of the Synod of Alabama, being a Southern Presbyterian. A unique distinction was bestowed upon when he was selected by the judges as "the city's greatest benefactor," to receive the five hundred dollar loving cup offered by the Birmingham News in 1920 "To the man or woman who had performed the greatest service during the year to the city." The award was made by a committee of nine, selected from various civic organizations. The names of any citizen considered worthy of the honor was requested by the committee and fifty-seven nominations were made including some of Birmingham's greatest benefactors, financially, and otherwise, but when the time came for the decision to be made, it was unanimously decided that Dr. James A. Bryan was pre-eminently the man who had served the city the best. The award was made at a public meeting at the Bijou theatre witnessed by thousands. BUSH, THOMAS GREEN, merchant, manufacturer, railroad president, publicist, Confederate soldier, legislator, and philanthropist, was born August 19, 1847, in Pickensville, Pickens County, died November 11, 1909, in Birmingham and is buried in Elmwood cemetery, Birmingham, Ala.; son of Albert P. and Sarah (Williams) Bush, the former a native of Georgia who came to Alabama about 1835 and settled in Pickens County, where he merchandised until 1852, when he removed to Mobile and engaged in the cotton commission business, also owning a cotton plantation in Noxubee County, Miss.; grandson of John and Nancy (King) Bush, who came from Georgia to Alabama about 1830 and settled a plantation near Oxford where they continued to reside, and of Curtis and Patience (Thomas) Williams, a member of the State legislature; great-grandson of Curtis Williams who also served in the Alabama legislature. Colonel Bush removed to Mobile with his parents in early childhood and there received his primary and college preparatory courses. When but fourteen years of age he entered the University of Alabama and served as adjutant of the cadet corps there until 1864 when he joined the Confederate Army. After the war, in October, 1865, he resumed his educational activities, at the University of Mississippi, his own Alma Mater having been burned by Federal troops, and graduated in 1867 in the class with his older brother, Curtis, the latter receiving first and he second honors. He served with the 62nd Alabama Regiment of Infantry, Confederate States Army, 1864-65. In May of the latter year he was captured at Blakely, Ala., following a severe battle in which he took part, and was held prisoner at Ship Island and New Orleans until the surrender of Gen. Dick Taylor, when he was exchanged at Vicksburg and paroled at Meridian, Miss. Immediately after leaving college he entered the cotton commission business with his father and brother, but in 1874 established himself in the wholesale grocery business, which still continues under the name of the T. G. Bush Grocery Company, now owned and conducted by his son, Albert P. Bush (q. v.).

Colonel Bush was possessed of marked executive ability and business foresight, as exemplified by the numerous successful enterprises with which he was connected during his residence in Mobile, Anniston and Birmingham, at which places he successively resided. He was elected president of the Mobile and Birmingham Railroad in 1886, which position he held until his death, the road having been constructed under his management; was elected president of the Shelby Iron company in 1890 and managed its affairs until his death; president, and organizer with Mr. D. T. Parker, of the Anniston water supply, 1890-1909; president Woodstock Iron company 1891-92; president Clifton Iron company, Ironton, 1892-99; president 1st National bank of Anniston during the year 1890; president Alabama Consolidated Coal and Iron company, 1899 to 1907, the company being the result of the consolidation during the former year of the Standard Coal company, the Clifton Iron company, the Gadsden Furnace company, the Mary Pratt Furnace company, and the Mary Lee or Lewisburg mines; president Imperial Coal and Coke company, 1905-09; president Coosa Pipe and Foundry company 1905-09; president Planters and Merchants Insurance company, 1888. Besides the foregoing he assisted in organizing the Gray Ore Iron company in 1905; was director of the Alabama Great Southern Railroad, 1908-09; director American Trust and Savings bank 1903-09; receiver of the Southern Car and Foundry company, 1905. Colonel Bush was zealous for the welfare of his city and State. He assisted in organizing the Chamber of Commerce in Mobile in 1884 and was elected its president, serving two terms. His desire for a "clean city" took shape in his efforts to regulate the whiskey license in Mobile and to reform the city government during that period known locally as the "Mobile Revolution." He was elected a member of the Rivers and Harbors Committee of Mobile, 1884, and personally presented the claims of that harbor to President Grover Cleveland during whose administration the first large appropriation, $250,000.00 was made by Congress for the improvement of Mobile harbor.

In recognition of his wide business experience Colonel Bush was appointed to membership on the Monetary Commission, 1897, chosen under the resolution of the Indianapolis convention. The commission was highly commended "for the splendid usefulness to our Country and to mankind, of their report on the conditions, faults and dangers of our present laws, regulations and customs covering the currency, banking and standard of value of the United States of America." In 1907 he was appointed by President Roosevelt to represent the South on the "Foundation for the promotion of industrial peace," in which movement he remained active until his death. He used his managerial experience in behalf of charitable, eleemosynary and educational institutions, and was a trustee of Howard College, 1883-98, the Alabama Schools for the Deaf and the Blind, at Talladega, 1888-95, and of the Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, Louisville, Ky., for many years, and to the latter institution he gave large sums of money. He was captain of the "Mobile Cadets," 1885, and a member of the Alabama legislature, 1886-87, serving as Chairman of the Ways and Means committee of that body. In recognition of his public services and private achievements he received from the University of Alabama in 1906, the honorary degree of LL. D. He was a man of deep religious convictions and exemplified in his own life the theory that a successful business man can also be a consistent Christian. In early life he connected himself with the Baptist church. He was a Democrat, member of no organizations. Married: June 6, 1871, at Montgomery, to Alberta, daughter of Rev. Albert and Anna Eliza (Hollis) Williams, of the Baptist church, both natives of Georgia who removed to Alabama where they continued to reside. The father of Albert Williams owned at Athens the first cotton factory in Georgia. Children: 1. Annie, m. William D. Nesbitt (q. v.); 2. Albert P. (q. v.), m. Marcia Belle Burgess, Mobile; 3. Morris W., m. Margaret Gage Bham, Ala.; 4. Thomas Green, Jr., m. Bonham King, Rome, Ga.; 5. Edwin Hollis, m. Rebecca Herndon, Mobile, Ala. Last residence: Birmingham.

BUTLER, JAMES EDWARD, planter, merchant, was born May 20, 1843, at Poplar Ridge, Madison County, and died July 23, 1913, at New Hope; son of Canada and Nancy (Maples) Butler, the former a native of North Carolina, resided at Poplar Ridge, Madison County, was a republican and during the War of Secession served as a member of the state legislature, his death occurring while on duty in Montgomery in which place he is buried. The latter was a descendant of Holland ancestry, grandson of Samuel and Margaret (Layman) Butler who resided at Woodville, Jackson County. The Laymans are of Scotch descent and the Butlers of Irish descent, the first member of that family coming to Virginia and afterwards locating in North Carolina, Tennessee, and finally in Alabama. The greatgrandfather of James Edward Butler was William Maples who was killed in the battle of Bunker Hill during the Revolutionary war. James Edward Butler received his education in the country schools and at the age of eighteen years, in September, 1861, he joined Co. C, the Fourth Alabama Cavalry, with which he served until September, 1864. He was under General Joe Wheeler as messenger and performed good service in that place on account of his quickness, bravery and small stature. He was captured near Columbia, Tennessee, taken to Nashville and thence to Camp Chase, Ohio, where he was imprisoned until June, 1865. After the war he returned to his home and engaged in planting and later became interested in the mercantile business, building up the third largest business of the kind in north Alabama. He was a democrat and served as justice of the peace, and was one time chairman of the county convention that nominated the various county officers, and a member of the Primitive Baptist church at Bethel, which was built by his father, Canada Butler. Married: January 2, 1868, at Vienna, to Nancy Jane Nichols, daughter of James and Martha Jane (Dilworth) Nichols who resided at Vienna. Children: 1. James Canada, New Hope; 2. Charlotte, m. CROCKARD, FRANK HEARNE, business man, was born October 29, 1873, in Wheeling, W. Va.; son of William Crockard, at one time associated with Col. Frank J. Hearne in the management of iron and steel plants at Wheeling. He received his education in the Linsley Institute of Wheeling, entered Lehigh University where he took a collegiate course, and then became a student in the Michigan College of Mines. His practical training was acquired at Wheeling in the Benwood Furnace, where he started as foreman at two dollars per day; a year later was sent to Steubenville, O., to resurrect the Jefferson Iron Works; in less than six months had the plant on a paying basis resulting in his promotion to blast furnace superintendent at Riverside; later was made assistant manager of the Riverside Works, then the largest pipe mill in the United States; and subsequently became connected with the Tennessee Coal, Iron & Railroad Company at Birmingham. In July, 1906, he was elected a member of the executive board with title of vice president and general manager and also manager of the Southern District of the Republic Iron and Steel Company, and his first achievement of importance was the reconstruction of the Ensley plant, planning and supervising the building of a new open hearth steel plant, new rail mill, new skip-filled blast furnaces, boiler plant, lime plant, new railroad construction and the opening of additional coal and iron mines. Up to that time that plant was the largest scheme of iron and steel development undertaken in the south. He continued with the Tennessee Company until July, 1917, when he became president of the Nova Scotia Coal & Steel Company, a position he filled about a year; in August, 1918, was elected president of the Woodward Iron Company, a corporation founded by men from his native city; and he is now the executive head of this important corporation. Mr. Crockard took a great interest in the welfare work of the Pennsylvania Coal, Iron & Railroad Company and took an active part in many activities of this department. He is a member of the Lotus Club of New York, the Duquesne Club of Pittsburgh, the Roebuck Club of Birmingham and of Beta Theta Pi, a college fraternity. HANNAH, ELIZABETH (SESSIONS), civic, patriotic and religious worker, was born September 7, 1871, at Union Springs, Bullock County; daughter of Dr. Lewie and Exa Caroline (Simmons) Sessions, the former a native of Zebulon, near Griffin, Spaulding County, Ga., who removed to Union Springs where he practiced medicine for 20 years, and for 30 years was engaged in the banking business, a Confederate soldier, a Mason and Methodist; granddaughter of Frederick and Mary (Kendall) Sessions, and of William and Elizabeth (Maddox) Simmons, all of near Griffin, Ga. John Sessions of North Carolina, an early American ancestor, fought with the patriots in the Revolutionary War. The Sessions family from which Mrs. Hannah is descended came to America from Soissons, France. Representatives of this line have filled conspicuous places in the political life of the several states, among them a governor in Ohio, and a lieutenant-governor in another State. Some amassed large fortunes, and one was a missionary to the Sandwich Islands. The words of the hymn, "Sessions," written by Ralph Waldo Emerson, were inspired by the author's love and admiration for his pastor, Rev. Alexander Sessions, Congregational minister, a member of the same family of Sessions as the subject of this sketch. The Simmons family has for two hundred years been known in Georgia, for achievements in various walks of life, distinguished for piety, and aided in laying the foundations for old Georgia Methodism. Mrs. Hannah received her early education in Union Springs, graduated with honor in 1889 from Wesleyan College, Macon, Ga., and also received a degree in Music from the same institution. She has been president of the City Mission Board and vice-president of the State Missionary Society of the Methodist church; regent Peter Forney Chapter, D. A. R.; president 1920-21, Montgomery City Federation Women's Clubs; secretary of the 5th district Women's Clubs; chairman Montgomery County National League for Woman's Service during 1917-19; State chairman Health and Recreation, Council of Defense, 1917-19; president No Name Club, and member of the Sophie Bibb Chapter, United Daughters of the Confederacy. She is a Methodist and a Democrat. Married: April 28, 1897, at Union Springs, to Dr. William John Hannah of Pensacola, Fla.; son of Capt. Thomas and Mary (Shorter) Hannah of Pensacola, the former identified with the political life of Florida during his early manhood, having at one time been a member of the legislature of that state, and a Confederate soldier, the latter was related to the celebrated Shorter and O'Neal families of Alabama and was a native of the latter State. The paternal grandmother Hannah was a quaint little lady of great culture, speaking fluently seven languages. Children: 1. Hazel; 2. William Sessions. Residence: Montgomery.

HARDAWAY, BENJAMIN HURT, civil engineer, was born February 19, 1866, on his father's plantation six miles from Union Springs; son of Robert Archelus and Rebecca (Hurt) Hardaway (q. v.). Benjamin H. Hardaway was educated at the Alabama polytechnic institute and the University of Alabama, graduating from the latter college with the degree of B. S. in 1882. He remained with the University as assistant instructor in mathematics until 1885, receiving successively the degrees of A. B., B. E., 1884, A. M., 1886, and C. E., 1887. In 1885 he was resident engineer on the construction of the Savannah, Americus and Montgomery railroad; chief engineer, 1886, building it from Americus to Abbeville; division engineer, Chattanooga, Rome and Columbus railroad, 1887; chief engineer, East Alabama railroad, 1888; resident engineer, Georgia Pacific railroad, 1888; engineer in charge of the Chattahoochee River bridge, for the Alabama midland railroad, later assistant chief engineer for this road; assistant chief engineer, Montgomery, Tuscaloosa and Memphis railroad, having charge of the completion of construction from Bainbridge, Ga., to Troy, and making the final location surveys from Maplesville to Centerville. In 1890 he began contracting and for ten years his work was largely railroad work, but since that time it has been almost entirely in connection with the development of water power. The work of the Hardaway contracting company, of which he is president, comprises about eight-tenths of the hydraulic construction in the South which has been built up to the present time. Married: September 14, 1888, at Carrollton, Miss., to Rebecca Money. Children: 1: Rebecca Money, deceased; 2. At the cessation of hostilities he returned to his plantation near Columbus, Ga., and in 1869, bought a farm near Opelika, later in August, 1870, removing to a plantation near LaFayette. From November, 1869, to March, 1872, he was engineer and general manager of the East Alabama railway and in January, 1873, went to Auburn as professor of engineering and commandant of the Agricultural and mechanical college. In September, 1881, he became engineer on the Mexican Central railroad with headquarters at Tampico, Mex., returning to Alabama in June, 1882, to accept the professorship of engineering in the University of Alabama. Married: June 17, 1857, at the residence of her cousin and guardian, Joel Early Hurt, at Wynnton, Ga., to Rebecca Elizabeth, daughter of William and Elizabeth (Bass) Hurt. Children: 1. Robert Early, civil engineer, married Tillie Dainwood, Deming, New Mexico; 2. George; 3 Benjamin Hurt (q. v.). Last residence: Columbus, Ga.

HARDING, WILLIAM P. G., governor of the Federal Reserve Board since 1916, was appointed a member of the board by Ex-President Woodrow Wilson in 1914. Although he still retains citizenship in Alabama he has been a resident of Washington, D. C., since that date. Mr. Harding was born on the 5th of May, 1864, in Greene County, Ala., a son of Horace and Eliza P. (Gould) Harding, the former who was a graduate of Harvard with the class of 1848 a, civil engineer, railroad official, and resident engineer for United States improvement on the Warrior River in Alabama.

William P. G. Harding received his early education in the schools of Tuscaloosa and in due time entered the University of Alabama from which he was graduated A. B., in 1880; A. M., in 1881; and the degree of D. D. was conferred in 1916. Soon after putting his textbooks aside, Mr. Harding accepted a position as bookkeeper in the private bank of J. H. Fitts & Company of Tuscaloosa and there remained from 1882 until 1886. He then became a bookkeeper for E. F. Bouchelle, a general merchant of Boligee, there remaining from January to March, 1886. His advance in banking circles was rapid and being a man of progressive spirit, ruled by more than ordinary judgment, he steadily advanced in orderly progression to the honorable office which he now holds. From 1886 to 1894 he was assistant cashier of the Berney National Bank at Birmingham, at the end of that time being promoted to the position of cashier which he held until 1896. He was then vice president of the First National Bank from 1896 to 1902 and subsequently became president of that institution which office he held until 1914. In 1908 he was elected president of the Bankers Association, in 1913, president of the Birmingham Chamber of Commerce and a director of several local corporations. In a word his aid and support have always been given on the side of advancement and improvement and his labors have been far-reaching, beneficial and resultant. From 1912 to 1914 he served as trustee of the Alabama School for Deaf and Blind at Talladega, receiving his appointment from Governor O'Neal and in 1914 he was appointed a member of the Federal Reserve Board where he served in that capacity until 1916 when he was made governor of the board, an honor which was conferred upon him in recognition of his effective work and superior ability in that connection. In 1918 he was managing director of the War Finance Corporation of the United States.

On the 22d of October, 1895, in Birmingham occurred the marriage of Mr. Harding and Miss Amanda P. Moore, a daughter of Syndenham Moore. Her paternal grandfather was Col. Syndenham Moore of Mexican and Civil war fame and a member of the Congress of 1855 and 1861. She is also a cousin of Emmet O'Neal, governor of Alabama from 1911 to 1915. To their union three children were born: Mary Elizabeth, now Mrs. Frederick H. Prince, Jr., of Boston, Mass.; Margaret Eliot; and Alice Moore.

In both Washington, D. C., and Birmingham, Mr. Harding is well known socially being identified with the best clubs in both cities. In Birmingham he has membership in the Country Club and the Southern Club while in Washington he belongs to the Metropolitan and Chevy Chase Clubs. He is a Master Mason. In politics he has never taken an active part preferring to devote his entire time to his business interests. His religious faith is that of the Episcopal church.

Mr. Harding is of an old and honored family being a descendant in the eighth generation from Abraham Harding who came from England to Plymouth, Mass., in 1623. A brother of that early ancestor, Stephen Harding, came over at the same time and was an ancestor of Warren G. Harding, President of the United States.

HENTZ, MRS. CAROLINE LEE (WHITING), author and teacher, was born in 1800, in Lancaster Hill, Mass., and died in 1856, at Marianna, Fla., where she is buried; daughter of Colonel John Whiting of the Revolutionary Army, and sister of three brothers who fought in the War of 1812. Reverend Samuel Whiting, an ancestor, was prominent in early Colonial times. The family came to America from England. At twelve years of age the future celebrity began writing juvenile plays and stories. "Gessimentia; or The Enchanted Ring," and "Eveline, a Tragedy," were produced for the pleasure of her schoolmates at that time. Her marriage to an educator and scientific writer furnished a congenial atmosphere for Mrs. Hentz. In 1826 she accompanied her husband to Chapel Hill, N. C.; where he held the chair of modern languages and Belles-Lettres, in the State University. Four years later they removed to Covington, Ky., where they jointly conducted a school, and where she wrote "De Lara; or The Moorish Bride; A Tragedy," a play successfully produced at the Arch Street theatre, Philadelphia, Pa. A second play, "Lamora," a tragedy of Indian life followed, and this in turn by "Constance of Werdenburg." In 1832 the Hentz family removed to Cincinnati, Ohio, where her talent was encouraged by intellectual contemporaries, the period in her career bringing forth magazine articles and poems, as well as her novel, "Lovell's Folly." It was in 1834 that Mr. and Mrs. Hentz, with their four children came to Alabama, locating in Florence where they taught. In 1843 they removed to Tuscaloosa, and while there she wrote "Aunt Patty's Scrap Bag," and a number of poems. Two years later they opened a school at Tuskegee. In 1848 they removed to Columbus, Ga., and during that year "The Mob-Cap" appeared. Her husband's health gave way and both were forced to abandon teaching, the wife supporting the family with her writings. In 1850, "Linda," was published. Two years later the couple, with their younger children removed to Marianna, Fla., having been preceded there by the two elder children. This year, 1852, "Marcus Warland; or the Long Moss Spring," and "Eoline; or Magnolia Vale," were published. The following books rapidly succeeded each other: "Miss Thusa's Spinning Wheel"; "Wild Jack"; "Helen and Arthur"; "The Planter's Northern Bride"; "Robert Graham"; two volumes of stories, dialogues, poems and sketches compiled from earlier writings. For an amateur dramatic club of Quincy she wrote the play, "Don Carlos de Castro." Her last works were "Courtship and Marriage" and "Ernest Lynwood," published in 1856. Married: September 30, 1824, in Lancaster, Mass., to Nicholas Marcellus Hentz, a native of France, member of a prominent family of that country, and himself a man of culture, a teacher and author. Children: Four were born of the union. Last residence: Marianna, Fla.

HICKS, JOHN HILLIARD, business man, was born June 19, 1858, in Coosa County and died January 6, 1919, at Talladega; son of Charles Ragan and Nancy Eliza (Porter) Hicks, the former removed to Alabama from Georgia in 1854, and served for the entire duration of the War of Secession as sergeant of the 60th Alabama infantry regiment, C. S. Army; grandson of Johnson H. and Nancy (Ragan) Hicks, of Troupe County, Ga., and of John and Nancy (McLane) Porter of Troupe County, Ga. The Porters are of English descent, their ancestors having settled in Clarke County, Ga., while the Hicks ancestors, also from England, settled on Long Island, N. Y. Mr. Hicks was educated in the schools at Bethany, Coosa County. He began his business career at the age of eighteen when he rented a farm, making enough money to enter the mercantile business the following year. In 1880 he removed to Talladega where he continued the mercantile business, later entered the shoe business and also became a cotton buyer. In 1899 he built the Highland City cotton mills and in 1909 bought the Chinabee cotton mill. He was president of the Talladega national bank from the time of its establishment in 1905 until his death and was a trustee of the Alabama school for deaf and blind for a number of years. He was a Democrat, and a Methodist having been a member of the board of stewards for over thirty years. Married: September 20, 1881, at Munford, to Mary, daughter of Bryant and Ellen (Camp) Pearce; granddaughter of Joseph Camp, a pioneer settler in Talladega County, and a Methodist minister. Children: 1. Walter Clifton, m. Daisie Camp; 2. Mary Elizabeth, m. William Laurence Dumas; 3. Bertha Louise; 4. Gladys; 5. James Lewis, m. Natalie Stokes. Last residence: Talladega.

INGALLS, ROBERT INGERSOLL, manufacturer, was born October 27, 1882, at Huntsville, Ohio; son of Horace P. and Flora B. (Bimel) Ingalls, the former a native of New Hampshire, a graduate of Dartmouth college, a noted scientist and collector for natural history museums, and a contributor to the Cincinnati and Philadelphia Zoological collections; grandson of Daniel Tapley Ingalls, a soldier of the War of 1812. Robert I. Ingalls was educated in the public schools of Huntsville, O., and at the Ohio northern university, at Ada, O. He began his business career at Dayton, as a clerk for S. J. Patterson, coal operator, and later became financially interested in the Patterson coal mines in West Virginia. In 1910 he came to Alabama, locating in Birmingham, having bought a half interest in the old Richard iron works which became the Ingalls iron works company upon his acquisition of the whole property. A new plant was completed in 1914 which has since been enlarged to many times its original size and in 1918 a large additional tract of land for plant extension was acquired. It is the largest plant of its kind in the South, structural steel fabricators being made. Offices are maintained in New York and New Orleans and at the same time agencies are maintained in the South, Southeast, and Cuba. An export business to France, Central America, South America and Cuba has also been developed.

In November, 1916, Mr. Ingalls organized the American forging company, which manufactures drop forgings, and is the only plant of its kind south of Richmond, Va. This company manufactured row locks, sister hooks and general ship fittings for the United States government during the World War. It is at the present engaged in the manufacture of automobile parts and accessories. In 1917 he also became interested in the Birmingham machine and foundry company.

Mr. Ingalls is president of the American forging company and of the Ingalls iron works; member Rotary Club, a Mason; and a Shriner.

Married: April 14, 1908, to Ellen, daughter of M. J. Gregg, of Birmingham. Children: 1. Robert Ingersoll, jr. Residence: Birmingham.

JOHNSON, CRAWFORD TOY, business man, was born May 20, 1873, at Danville, Va. At an early age he removed to Oxford, Miss., where he received his early education and graduated from the University of Mississippi at the age of seventeen. He removed to Chattanooga, Tenn., where he engaged in the real estate and insurance business, was for eight years deputy clerk of the United States court at that place, and later became interested in the merchandise brokerage business. In 1902 he removed to Alabama, locating in Birmingham, where he established the Birmingham Coca Cola bottling company, a business he has carried on with marked success since that time. He is a large investor in Birmingham real estate and director, First national bank of Birmingham and of the Farmers' and Ginners' cotton company. In 1915 he was elected president of the Birmingham chamber of commerce which was then in debt and which he most successfully managed, bringing it again to a solid financial condition. Secretary William G. McAdoo, on November 19, 1917, appointed him State director for Alabama for war savings, a position he filled with much credit until the close of the World War. He is a Baptist; Knight Templar; Mason, and a Shriner. Married: in 1897, to Caroline Acree, of Chattanooga, Tenn. Children: 1. Crawford Toy, jr., student Yale university at outbreak of World War, assigned to naval aviation section, received training at Seattle, Wash., quartermaster of unit, and discharged at New Orleans, La.; 2. Allen A. Residence: Birmingham.

JORDAN, MORTIMER HARVIE, physician and captain, American Expeditionary Forces, was born November 15, 1881, in Birmingham, died July 31, 1918, at Evacuation hospital No. 7, and is buried at Coulommiers, Seine, France; son of Dr. Mortimer Harvie and Florence Earle (Mudd) Jordan (q. v.). Captain Jordan received his early education in the schools of Birmingham, attended the University of Alabama, 1898-1902, and graduated from the medical department of Tulane university with the degree of M. D. He located in Birmingham and made a specialty of skin diseases. He was captain of Co. K, Fourth Alabama infantry regiment, National Guard, from November, 1915, to June, 1916, and commanded that company during border service at Nogales, Arizona, June, 1916, to March, 1917. He went overseas during the European War, as captain of Co. K, 167th Regiment, Rainbow Division. After a course of study in France at the staff school in Lorgues, he was transferred to headquarters as intelligence and operation officer. He was mortally wounded on July 28, 1918, by high explosives at the Ourcq River. He was awarded the distinguished service cross for extraordinary heroism near Souian, France, July 16, 1918. Seeing a private of his company wounded by shell fire, Captain Jordan left his shelter and rushed to the aid of the wounded. After administering first aid, he carried him through the terrific bombardment a distance of one hundred and fifty yards to a place of safety. He was a Democrat; Episcopalian; and a member of the Phi Delta Theta college fraternity. Married: June 9, 1909, in Birmingham, to Lucile, daughter of Judge Zell and Lella (Dulin) Gaston, of Greenville, Butler County, later of Birmingham; granddaughter of Adam Baty and Sophia (McMullin) Dulin, and of Zell Gaston; great-granddaughter of Lucius C. and Amanda J. (Rawls) Gaston, of Barbour County. Children: 1. Mortimer H.; 2. Lucile Gaston. Last residence: Birmingham.

LINTHICUM, EDWIN ERNEST, manufacturer, was born October 6, 1886, near Ellicott City, Howard County, Md.; son of George Washington and Katherine T. (Webb) Linthicum, the former a native of Montgomery County, Md., a member of a Maryland regiment during the War of Secession who removed to Catoosa, Ga., in 1870, where he engaged in the milling business, and about 1887 removed to Alabama, locating at Birmingham; grandson of Philip and Eleanor (McElfresh) Linthicum, of Montgomery County, Md., and of Joseph and Elizabeth (Kellar) Webb, of Ellicott City, Md. The Linthicum family of America are all descendants of Thomas and Jane Linthicum, of Wales, who emigrated to the Colony of Maryland in 1858. Members of this family saw service during the Revolutionary War. Edwin E. Linthicum received a common school education and finished at Oxford college, Oxford, Ala. He began his business career at Jenifer as station agent and telegraph operator for the East Tennessee, Virginia and Georgia railroad. He entered the service of the Radford pipe and foundry company, at Anniston, in 1889, remaining with this company for thirteen years, the last six as resident manager. This company in the meantime had been acquired by the United States cast iron pipe and foundry company. In 1905 he removed to Birmingham, where he was general manager of the construction of the plant of the American cast iron pipe company. In 1912, upon the organization of the National cast iron pipe company, he was elected vice-president and general manager until 1921, at which time he became president of this company. He is a Democrat; a Rotarian; and an elder in the First Christian church of Birmingham. Married: December 25, 1894, to Clara Mae, daughter of Henry and Henrietta Stoffregen, of Talladega County, Md. MANNING, FREDERICK HAUGHTON, president Alabama School for deaf and blind, was born February 11, 1859, at Mintonville, N. C.; son of William Henry and Rebeka (Trotman) Manning, the former a native of Edenton, N. C., who was educated at the Edenton male academy, studied law, removed to Alabama locating in Troy where he practiced his profession, later becoming county judge, returned to North Carolina in 1847, becoming a planter in Gates County, served as member of the North Carolina house of representatives in 1862, conducted a military training class during the War of Secession with the rank of captain, member of state senate, and a Baptist; grandson of Joseph Manning, who moved from Princess Anne County, Va., to Edenton, N. C., and of Rev. Quinton Hollowell Trotman. Mr. Manning received his early education in the rural schools of Gates County, N. C., and attended Sunbury academy, Sunbury, N. C., for one year. In 1881 he entered the preparatory department of Wake Forest College, N. C., graduating in 1887 with the degree of M. A., serving during his senior year as college librarian and editor of the college magazine, "The Wake Forest Student." He began his professional career in 1887 as assistant principal, Vine Hill male academy, N. C., becoming principal during the same year. In 1888 he was appointed a teacher in the blind department of the Colorado school for the deaf and blind. He removed to Alabama in 1895 upon his appointment as resident superintendent of the Alabama school for the deaf and blind, and became president in 1913 upon the death of Dr. J. H. Johnson. He is a Democrat; Baptist; and a Mason. Married. (1) December 25, 1889, at Colorado Springs, Colo., to Mrs. Anne (Cummings) Wing, who died in January, 1913, daughter of Col. George and Anne (Haynes) Cummings, of Bangor, Me., and a direct descendant of the Scottish chieftain, "The Black Comyn"; (2) September 2, 1914, to Ida, daughter of Rufus Morgan Henderson, a prominent business man of Talladega. Mrs. Manning died February 7, 1919. Children: by first wife, 1. Thomas Cummings, student Marion Military institute and University of Alabama, served in France during the World war as second lieutenant, headquarters company, 32nd brigade heavy artillery and was twice cited for promotion. Residence: Talladega.

MCADORY, ISAAC WELLINGTON, educator, legislator, and Confederate soldier, was born September 17, 1843, at Pleasant Hill, Jefferson County; son of Thomas and Emily Elmore (Owen) McAdory, the former a native of Hopkinsville, Christian County, Ky., later removed to Jonesboro, Jefferson County, Ala., where he became a slave-holding planter, militia officer, justice of the peace for many years, commissioner of Jefferson County, and a teacher for a short while; grandson of Thomas and Celia (McAshan), McAdory, both natives of Ireland, settled in Hopkinsville, Ky., from whence they moved to the present site of Birmingham, Jefferson County in 1817, and after the former's death his widow married William Prude, and of Thomas and Mary (Elmore) Owen who lived at Russellville, later going to Okalona, Miss., where he died in 1849, his widow removing to Jefferson County, where she died in 1852; great-grandson of David and Lucy (McGraw) Owen, natives of South Carolina, who later removed to Russellville; great-great-grandson of Thomas Owen of Virginia and of Samuel and Alice (Walker) McGraw of Richmond, Va. The original American ancestor was Thomas Owen, a native of Wales. Professor McAdory's early education was received at Salem academy, Jefferson County, his teachers being Jacob H. Baker, the pioneer educator in that county, and later Henry and Benjamin Meek, and John

CLARENCE J. OWENS

Rockett. The academy consisted of two large two-storied buildings, a male and a female academy, also a large dormitory. The schools were well equipped with the best furniture, laboratory apparatus, etc. John Rockett was teacher in 1861, when he left to join the Confederate Army. The school opened again in 1864, taught by Miss Carrie McAdory, sister of Professor I. W. McAdory. In 1868 the buildings were burned. On returning from the army after the surrender Professor McAdory secured a contract to teach a ten months school at Bucks-ville, Tuscaloosa County. The next year as the University had been burned by the Federal troops, he attended a school in Tuscaloosa, taught in Odd Fellows hall, by Professor Benjamin Meek, under whom he studied Latin, Greek and higher mathematics. In 1868 he opened school at Pleasant Hill, near McCalla, Jefferson County, where he continued to teach until 1889, at which latter date he was made county superintendent of education of Jefferson County, an office to which he was successively re-elected until 1913 when he retired to his old home and farm at Pleasant Hill. In that simple rural school at Pleasant Hill many men and women received their academic education. From there went forth men who became renowned as ministers, lawyers, physicians, financiers and State officials, among them Thomas M. Owen, deceased, Alabama's historian, and Governor Hogg of Texas. After retiring from his educational labors, which covered a period of fifty years, Professor McAdory was made chairman of the board of trustees of the new "McAdory high school," named in his honor, and which had succeeded the old Pleasant Hill school. Although not a candidate Professor McAdory was popularly nominated on the Democratic ticket and elected a member of the Alabama legislature, 1886-87. During his three years of active service in the Confederate Army he rose through the successive grades of corporal, sergeant, lieutenant and for twelve months commander of Co. H, 28th Alabama regiment, Manegault's Brigade, Hindman's Division, Polk's Corps, Army of the Tennessee. In February, 1865, the 24th, 28th and 34th regiments were consolidated and became the Twenty-fourth Alabama regiment. At the time of the surrender of General Joseph Johnston, at High Point, near Greensboro, N. C., April 26, 1865, he was first lieutenant, Co. K, and in command of that company in the 24th Alabama consolidated regiment. He actively participated in the fighting from Corinth, Miss., through the Kentucky campaigns, was at Murfreesboro, Chattanooga, Chickamauga, Missionary Ridge, Orchard Knob, Dalton, Atlanta, Bentonville and Greensboro, N. C. He walked most of the way back home during May, 1865, and went to work on his father's farm, and hauling government cotton to Montevallo, which at that time was the nearest railroad point.

Professor McAdory was practically the first county superintendent of education in Alabama to devote his entire time to the work of supervision of schools, going constantly from one community to the next, aiding the people through cooperation to build their own school houses, for at that time there was no public fund available for this purpose. The consolidation of the one-room schools was begun in this period. Under his administration traveling libraries were circulated in the county and teachers' institutes were held over the county at frequent intervals. A far reaching movement was begun in 1907 under his leadership, resulting in 1913 in having the subjects of music, art, manual training and home economics included in the course of study for the school children in the rural districts of Jefferson County. "Build the bridge of life as broad as possible for the country child," was a motto adopted by him, for he believed the children in the country should not have their vision limited by their immediate environment, but should be encouraged to enter any field of activity for which they might, through the opportunities of school, find themselves gifted. That the negro children should be given a fair deal, was a principle of justice for which Professor McAdory worked both while in the legislature as a member of the committee on education, and during the time he was superintendent of education. His attitude towards his teachers was one of true friendship, and a companionship which resulted in the close co-operation between the teachers was largely instrumental in building up the great system of schools, which in 1913, at the time Professor McAdory retired from office, was turned over to his successor. Married: May 4, 1874, at Pleasant Hill, to Alice Eulalia, daughter of Isaac Wellington and Martha (Prude) Sadler, of that place, a graduate of the Tuscaloosa female college, and for several years a teacher; granddaughter of William Rose and Nancy (Moreland) Sadler, the former a Virginian, highly educated, a practical engineer, the latter a native of Westmoreland County, N. C., and after their marriage in the latter place they removed, in 1816, to Alabama, and settled at Old Jonesboro, where the Thomas Brothers were at the same time starting a silk industry, the original house still stands, it later having become the home of Colonel Jim McAdory. The maternal grandparents were John and Margaret (Whitmore) Prude, the former a native of London, England, the latter of Lawrence County, S. C. They removed to Alabama after their marriage in the latter place and settled at the Neighbors, or Nabor's Spring, Jefferson County, but he returned to Tennessee on business and died there in 1817. The great-grandparents were John and Alice (Garrett) Whitmore, the former losing his life in the Revolutionary War. Children: 1. Wellington Prude, physician, m. Lillie Bell Hunt, Birmingham; 2. Emily, died in infancy; 3. Thomas Hennington, lawyer, died 1913, Birmingham; 4. Isaac Sadler, professor of anatomy and histology in the college of veterinary surgery, Alabama polytechnic institute, m. Mrs. Cora (Hardie) Scott, Auburn; 5. Martha Caroline, m. Lawrence Otis Caldwell, Bristol, Tenn.; 6. Joseph Elmore, died in infancy; 7. Margaret Eulalia, director of the Art department of the Jefferson County schools, Birmingham; 8. Jasper David, died in infancy; 9. Richard Rose, soldier in the World war, teacher and farmer, m. Louise Brady who is now deceased, Pleasant Hill. Residence: Pleasant Hill, Jefferson County.

MCADORY, WALTER KENNON, business man and public official, was born December 17, 1868, at Jonesboro, Jefferson County; son of Thomas and Jane Acre (Kennon) McAdory, natives respectively of Christian County, Ky., and Tuscaloosa County; grandson of Richard Lewis and Helen Elder (Emond) Kennon, the former served as a soldier in the Seminole War in Florida and died in that state about 1831 or 1832, the latter was born in Petersburg, Va., in 1806, her parents being Scotch emigrants; brother of I. NELSON, FRANK, JR., business man, was born February 17, 1865, about a mile and a quarter from the county seat of Shelby County; son of Hardy S. and Sarah A. (Elliott) Nelson, both natives of the same locality, the former who in addition to operating a plantation was also a merchant at Columbiana. His grandfather came from South Carolina to Alabama in the early days. Frank Nelson, Jr., still continues the junior part of his name, being the namesake of an uncle now deceased, although the title properly belongs to his youngest son. He received his education in Shelby County and on Saturdays worked in his father's store. When thirteen years of age he moved to Columbiana, boarding with a brother-in-law, going to school during the week and working in the store on Saturdays; he prepared for the University of Alabama at Oxford College, Oxford, and completed his education at the State university. Returning to Columbiana he engaged in merchandising, the manufacture of charcoal and lumber which he continued for a number of years; removed from Shelby County to Bibb County and engaged in the manufacture of charcoal on an extensive scale, the product being shipped to furnaces at Briarfield, Shelby and Rome, and for several years was also in the banking business at Anniston. In 1902 he removed to Birmingham in order to look after some property interests he had acquired; the first year developed that property, located in Central Birmingham and at the West End; became president of the North Birmingham

Land Company, an office he has continued to hold; and through his personal efforts some thirty manufacturing plants have been located in North Birmingham, some being among the largest in the Birmingham district, including the American Cast Iron Pipe Company, the American Radiator Company, Kilby Frog & Switch Company, the American Sewer Pipe Company, the United States Cast Iron Pipe Company and the By-Products Plant of the Sloss-Sheffield Steel & Iron Company. In 1905 Mr. Nelson and associates bought and developed the Empire Coal Company, it being the largest producer of Black Creek coal and manufacturers of coke in the Birmingham district and proved to be one of the most profitable independent coal companies in Alabama. For ten years he was president and one of the owners; sold the entire property in 1915; about 1911 organized the Bryan Coal Corporation and has been its only president; with associates he purchased the Burnwell Coal Mining Company and the Samoset Coal Company in 1916, becoming president of both companies; bought a controlling interest in the Acme Laundry Company, which organization he perfected about 1912; in 1915 he built a modern plant which is the most complete and up-to-date institution of its kind in the south. He is one of the largest owners of central property in Birmingham, owning some of the most valuable down town corners. He was one of the organizers of the Traders National Bank, has since served on its board of directors; is a director in a number of other substantial business concerns; and has been connected with many enterprises having the distinctive civic and social betterment of the community in view. He is a member of the Southern, Roebuck and Country Clubs; was president of the Chamber of Commerce in 1909; and is a member of the Presbyterian church. ROSAMOND, EDWARD POWELL, general superintendent Pratt Consolidated Coal Company, was born July 3, 1867, at Jasper, Walker County; son of William Capers and Madora Frances (Freeman) Rosamond (q. v.). He was educated in the common schools of Jasper, later taking correspondence courses in practical mining. From 1886 to 1895 he was a bookkeeper and clerk in a store, and for the old Sheffield and Birmingham Iron and Railroad Company. Shortly afterwards he entered the employ of the Gamble mines, and was soon made superintendent. The mines in the meantime had become the property of the Townley Mining Company. In 1900 he removed to Birmingham and was employed by G. B. McCormack, general manager of the Tennessee coal, iron and railroad company, at Bessemer; six months later he entered the offices and was advanced to a responsible place in the auditing department. In 1902 he became superintendent of the mines, coke ovens and land of the Tennessee company in Walker County. Since May, 1905, Mr. Rosamond has been general superintendent of the Pratt Consolidated coal company. During 1905-07 he opened 18 mines for the Pratt company. He organized Jagger coal company, and developed the property consisting of 1,800 acres of land in 1913, in which he is part owner and secretary. President Powell Coal Co., and part owner. ROSAMOND, WILLIAM CAPERS, physician and druggist, Confederate surgeon, was born August 24, 1834, in Lawrence District, S. C., and died April 4, 1904; son of Nathaniel J. and Amy (Powell) Rosamond, the former of French Huguenot origin, his ancestors coming to Virginia about the time of the "Edict of Nantes" (1598), the latter was born in Kentucky, and removed to South Carolina with her parents and was married there. Dr. Rosamond was reared on the farm and received his elementary education in the country schools. In 1852 he began the study of medicine at Northport and was licensed to practice at Tuscaloosa. He removed to Walker County in 1856, and soon built up a good practice. In the War of Secession he enlisted in the Confederate States Army as a private, being later appointed Assistant-surgeon, in General Ferguson's brigade, seeing service in Tennessee, Mississippi, and Alabama. Upon the cessation of hostilities he returned to Jasper and in 1866 resumed his profession, in which he remained until 1878, when on account of his health he was forced to retire from the active practice. He was a member of the State senate from Walker, Jefferson and Shelby Counties during the 1878-79 session of the legislature. After that time until his death he was engaged in merchandising and the drug business. He was a Democrat; Methodist; Supt. Sunday School continuously for twenty-five years, and Mason. SMITH, JOSEPH RILEY, physician, one of the pioneer builders of Birmingham, and financier, was born February 6, 1818, in Jefferson County, and died August 30, 1895, at Elyton; son of John and Sally (Riley) Smith, the former a native of Union District, S. C., who pioneered to Alabama from Lincoln County, Tenn., and died in Jefferson County, 1876; grandson of David and Elizabeth (Flewellyn) Smith, natives of Wales, the latter a descendant of the royalty of that country, and of Joseph and Elizabeth (Hammonds) Riley, who lived in Rockcastle County, Ky. It was through David Crockett, one of the heroes of the Alamo, that the parents of Dr. Smith became interested in Jones' Valley, that hardy pioneer having visited the section and reported the fine qualities of the soil, timber and mineral resources. With their Tennessee neighbors, Joseph Riley and George Eubank, the John Smiths removed thence, settling with their families between the present Birmingham and Bessemer.

Doctor Smith was the first white child born in what is now Jefferson County. He was educated at Union seminary, Tenn., and graduated from the medical department of Transylvania college, Lexington, Ky. He entered upon the practice at Elyton, now a part of Birmingham, and continued in the profession from 1843 to 1870, after which time he engaged in mercantile, industrial and real estate activities. In association with Bayliss E. Grace, Sr., he founded the first newspaper in Jefferson County, "The Central Alabamian." He was one of the builders of Birmingham, keenly interested in all that pertained to the development of the mining, manufacturing and commercial interests of the "Magic City." He amassed a fortune, and at his death was the largest tax payer in the county, his estate being estimated at $2,000,000.00. A keen intellect, indomitable will, kindness of heart and charitable deeds, characterized him. In his will he left $20,000.00 to charity. Married (1). January 1, 1844, in Jefferson County, Margaret Harvie, a daughter of Mortimer and Lucy Scott (Gray) Jordan, I, who lived on Broad River, Oglethorpe County, Ga.; granddaughter of Gen. James and Frances (Collier) Scott, a Revolutionary officer of the Virginia line, cousin of Francis Scott Key, the author of "The Star Spangled Banner"; great-granddaughter of Hezekiah and Frances (Scott) Gray, the former originally from Port Tobacco, Md.; (2), in 1876, Mrs. Mary Smithers Kilpatrick of Lexington, Ky. Children: by first wife, 1. Lucy Gray; 2. Mortimer Jordan; 3. Mary Ella, m. Dr. George M. Morrow, (q. v.); 4. Sarah Emma, m. Rose Wellington Owen (q. v.); 5. John Fleming; 6. Martha Prince; 7. Joseph R., jr., m. (1) Kate Molton, (2) Minnie G. Valse, and lives at Fayetteville, Tenn.; 8. Thomas Octavius, m. Cornelia Hubbert, Birmingham; 9. Charles Jordan, m. Annie Molton, Birmingham; 10. SOMERVILLE, HENDERSON MIDDLETON, lawyer, founder Alabama law school, jurist, was born March 23, 1837, in Madison County, Va., and died September 15, 1915, in New York; son of Dr. James and Helen Glassell (Wallace) Somerville of Virginia, the former of Scotch stock, descended from Baron Somerville who went to England from Normandy, France, with William the Conqueror, while Lady Jane Grey, and Mary Somerville, the author, were members of the English branch of the family. Judge Somerville's primary education was acquired in the school of Mrs. John Little, Sr., and later he was prepared for college by Prof. Bradshaw of Tuscaloosa; entered the University of Alabama and graduated A. B., 1855, and

A. M., 1858. His legal training was received at Cumberland law school, Lebanon, Tenn., from which he graduated in 1859 with the LL. B. degree, and later was given the honorary LL. D. degree by that institution, and also from Georgetown, Ky., 1886, and Southwestern university, Tenn., 1887, and from the University of Alabama the same year. He entered upon the practice of his profession in Memphis, Tenn., upon completing his law course, but later, in the same year, removed to Tuscaloosa where he became associated in the practice with Judge John J. Ormond, a former justice of the Supreme court of Alabama. In 1873, on invitation of the board of regents of the University of Alabama, he founded the law school and remained at its head until his election to the bench as associate justice of the Alabama supreme court, 1880-1890. It was his own belief that his work as founder, lecturer and head of the law school of the University, constituted his best claim for posthumous remembrance, and the growth and prosperity of the law school always engaged his most anxious thought. For seventeen years he was trustee of the State hospital for the insane, and studied the condition and needs of its inmates. His most noted work as a judge was his opinion in Parson vs. State, 81 Alabama 577, fixing upon a scientific medico-legal basis the criminal responsibility of the insane. In 1890 he was appointed by President Harrison, chairman of the National board of custom appraisers, New York City, and held that office at the time of his death. He was a Democrat, and member of the State executive committee, 1872-80; a Southern Presbyterian, being a ruling elder and Sunday school teacher; a member of the Phi Beta Kappa and Alpha Delta Phi college fraternities; member of the American academy of political and social science; Alabama historical society; New York Southern society; president Alabama society in New York, 1908. He was a member of the State commission on lunacy, 1876-93; trustee of the Peabody educational fund, 1890; president New York medico-legal society, 1892-93. Married: (1) in 1862, at Tuscaloosa, to Cornelia Banks, daughter of Richard Norfleet and Amanda (Banks) Harris, (q. v.) natives of North Carolina, the former of Scotch Irish and the latter of English descent; (2) August 29, 1881, at Montgomery, to Mrs. Mary (Wyman) Saville. Children: by first marriage: 1. Henderson Middleton, jr., m. Mary Steele, Birmingham; 2. Dr. William Glassell, m. Minter Jones, Memphis, Tenn.; 3. Ormond (q. v.); 4. Archibald Bruce, m. Betty Taylor, Salem, N. C. Last residence: New York.

STEGER, JOHN CRADDOCK WISDOM, physician, was born Feb. 28, —, on a farm in Madison County; son of Benjamin and Mary Harris (Wisdom) Steger, the former a native of Powhatan County, Va., who located on a farm sixteen miles east of Huntsville, where he resided until his death; grandson of John Perratt and Rebecca Macon Steger of Madison County, and of Craddoc and Ann (Glen) Wisdom of Boston Hill, Cumberland County, Va. The children of the first settlers were denied educational advantages owing to the conditions that surrounded the pioneers, but from the libraries brought by their parents from Virginia they gained a fair general culture. The first teacher of note who located in Madison County was Prof. William A. Hays, in 1820, followed by J. H. Posey and John C. Nash. Mr. Steger received his preparatory education in the neighborhood school and a private school. He attended one term of the Georgia Military institute, Marietta, Ga., and one, 1855, at LaGrange college. He graduated in medicine in 1857 from the Nashville Medical College, and located at Carthage, Tenn. In 1858 he removed to Stewart, Tenn., where he remained until 1862, when he entered the Confederate service as surgeon, assigned to the 4th Alabama cavalry regiment. He was a member of the Tennessee legislature, 1872; trustee of Woods, Yeatman and company, iron manufacturers, with a landed estate of 150,000 acres; operated a cold blast furnace three years. He owned and edited "The Courier," Dover, Tenn., for several years and aided in getting rid of the dives that sprang up during reconstruction. He was chairman of the board of high school directors in Dover, and gave much time to the establishing of schools in Stewart County, Tenn. He is a member of the medical association of officers of the Army and Navy U. C. V. and served one term as vice president. He is a Methodist; and a Democrat. Residence: Gurley.

STEGER, KENNON HARRIS, farmer, was born on his father's plantation in Powhatan County, Virginia, Jan. 23, 1806—died Madison County, Ala., July 12, 1892. The subject of this sketch is a descendant of some of the oldest families of Virginia. In 1621, fourteen years after the settlement of Jamestown, Lieut. Col. Francis Eppes, recently of England, was a member of the House of Burgesses of Virginia. In 1806 his great great grandson, Francis Eppes Harris, and his wife, Mary Macon (daughter of Nathaniel Macon) moved with their family and all their goods by caravan across the mountains from Virginia to North Alabama and built a brick residence, which still stands four miles from Huntsville, Ala. At this time on the James River in Virginia lived John Perratt Steger, to whom had been granted a tract of land by the Crown. His son, John Perratt Steger, Jr., married Rebecca Macon Harris, daughter of Francis Eppes Harris, and they also moved to Madison County, Ala., (1810) bringing their infant son, Kennon Harris Steger, who was educated in the neighborhood schools of the period, and held tenaciously to an agricultural career, at which he was eminently successful. In beautiful Madison County with its mountains, valleys and clear mountain streams he grew to manhood, and Dec. 12, 1838, married Mary Elizabeth, daughter of Alexander Grey and Mary (Cooper) Wall, both descended from Colonial Virginia families. Being far beyond the age for military service during the War of Secession he was exempt from military service but gave his only son to the cause. He was a Democrat, a Methodist, and a Mason. On their estate near Huntsville, Ala., Kennon Harris Steger and his wife lived to a ripe old age, celebrating their golden wedding four years before his death. He was survived by his wife six years. He was one of Nature's noblemen. A true lover of nature, honest and upright, a patriotic citizen, a loyal friend, a worthy descendant of sturdy, honest, blunt, lovable Nathaniel Macon, some of whose characteristics he inherited. Children: 1. Mary Ann; 2. Cornelia Conrad; 3. Helen Gray, m. Alexander Simpson; 4. John Alexander, m. Mary Ella Simpson; 5. Laura Augustus; 6. Sallie Lacey; 7. Olivia James, m. John W. Nelson; 8. Bettie Ross, m. Virgil H. Ryland; 9. Fannie Rebecca, m. Wallace W. Dorman; 10. Lucy Allen; 11. Carrie DeLong, m. Robert E. Short. Last residence: Ryland.

STILES, JAMES P., lawyer and probate judge, was born April 27, 1860, near Starksville, Oktibbeha County, Miss.; son of John E. and Mary A. (Edmonds) Stiles, the former a native of Tennessee, who at the age of twenty-five removed to Mississippi where he became a planter, the latter a native of Virginia. James P. Stiles spent his early life on his father's plantation, attended school at Choctaw Agency, spent four and one half years at the Southwestern Baptist university, at Jackson, Tenn., and graduated from the law department of the University of Mississippi in 1881. He removed to Alabama in April, 1882, locating in Birmingham, where he entered upon the practice of his profession. In August, 1884, he was elected justice of the peace and in 1898 became judge of probate, a position he has since filled with great efficiency. He is a Baptist; Mason; and a Knight of Pythias. Married: November 3, 1886, to Mary C., daughter of Judge Mitchell T. Porter (q. v.). Children: four, three sons and one daughter. Residence: Birmingham.

STOCKHAM, WILLIAM H., business man, was born September 15, 1861, at Lafayette, Ind.; son of Dr. G. H. and Alice (Bunker) Stockham, the former who was a native of Ireland, was a graduate of the Medical Department of the University of Edinburgh, Scotland, came to the United States in 1856, and for many years engaged in the practice of his profession at Lafayette, Ind. William H. Stockham received a liberal education and was graduated from the University of Illinois in 1885. He then went to Chicago, was employed in various factories and learned about iron manufacture and fabrication; was employed in factories in both east and west becoming an expert foundryman; was in the pipe castings business in Chicago; and in 1903 removed to Birmingham. He established the Stockham Pipe and Fittings Company and with associates erected two small buildings at Thirty-fourth Street and Tenth Avenue. The plant grew rapidly and now occupies a large area of ground at Forty-first Street and Tenth Avenue, the plant itself occupying sixteen acres. William H. Stockham is president of the company, Herbert C. Stockham, vice president, R. C. Foster, secretary and T. F. Randolph, treasurer. He is a member of the First Methodist Episcopal church, one of the board of stewards, is active in the Sunday School Association and while attending the convention of the International Sunday School Association at Toronto in 1919 he, as the Alabama representative, extended the invitation to the association to hold its meeting for 1920 at Birmingham. He is also a member of the Rotary Club. Married: in 1887 to Miss Kate Clark. Children: 1. Herbert C., vice president of the company; 2. Douglas W., now a student at the University of Illinois, who was a member of the Students' Army Training Corps in the heavy artillery branch. Residence: Birmingham.

STRINGFELLOW, WILLIAM WHITTINGHAM, banker and manufacturer, was born in Hyde Park, New York; son of Rev. Horace and Mary M. Stringfellow, the former a native of Hanover County, Va., and for twenty-five years rector of St. John's Episcopal church, Montgomery, the latter born in Alexandria, Va. He was educated in private schools in Montgomery, but on account of ill health did not attend college. At seventeen years of age he went to work in a railroad office in Montgomery, and later engaged in farming. He removed to Anniston where he became a manufacturer and in 1890 president of the First national bank of Anniston. He later became president of the Kilby frog and switch company, Birmingham. For thirty years Mr. and Mrs. Stringfellow spent their summers in their beautiful mountain home at Blowing Rock, N. C., and since the latter's death he has built in memory of his wife the "Stringfellow memorial church" at that place. The edifice is constructed of native stone and above the altar is a madonna, "St. Mary of the Hills," in oil, painted and presented by Elliott Dangerfield of New York, the picture being regarded by critics as a modern masterpiece. There is now being built in Anniston the "Susie Stringfellow memorial hospital" which will accommodate sixty beds, some of which are to be charity beds. This hospital was planned by Mrs. Stringfellow before her death and money for its erection and endowment provided for by her will, and to be built after the death of her husband, but the latter is now carrying out his wife's noble dreams for the betterment of humanity. Mr. Stringfellow is an Episcopalian. Married: November 22, 1889, in Anniston, to Susie, daughter of Duncan T. Parker, formerly of Mobile and later of Anniston where he was associated with Samuel Noble and A. L. Tyler in building that town. The beautiful stone church there, the Parker memorial Baptist church, was built by Mrs. Stringfellow and her two sisters to the memory of their father and mother. Residence: Anniston.

STUBBS, GEORGE HAMILTON, surgeon, was born January 2, 1869, in Campbell County, Ga., and died November 28, 1919, at Birmingham; a son of James Arnold and Sarah Varner (Spear) Stubbs, the former who was born on a plantation in Franklin County, Ga., lived at Fairburn, Ga., at the time of his death, January 19, 1906, was a veteran of the War of Secession, having been a member of the Confederate army and with General Ector's brigade of Texas, was wounded in the Battle of New Hope the third year of the war at the close of which he became a planter; grandson

WALTHALL, HENRY BRAZEALE, actor, was born March 16, 1878, at Mallory's Station, Shelby County; son of Junius Leigh and Annie Mallory (Wallace) Walthall, the former a native of near Belona, Powhatan County, Va., who later removed to Alabama, and at the outbreak of the War of Secession enlisted in the Southern Forresters at Mobile; was made a second lieutenant and rose to a captaincy; grandson of Henry and Eliza (Brazeale) Walthall, of Powhatan County, Va., and of Dr. Robert and Ann (Mallory) Wallace of Harpersville, Shelby County. The Walthalls of Walthall, Westmoreland County, England, were an old family at the time of Henry VII, 1485 to 1509. In the latter half of the 17th century, three Walthall brothers emigrated to Virginia and became the progenitors of the American branch of the family. These brothers settled in Henrico County, Va., their home place, "Port Walthall," now lying in Chesterfield County. In 1853 the male line of the main branch of the family remaining in England, became extinct, and Henry Walthall Milrees, whose mother was a Walthall and heiress of the estate obtained a royal license to assume the name and arms of the Walthalls, and is now Henry Walthall, Esq., of Alton Manor, Derbyshire, England, and is the recognized head of the family. Henry Walthall, the Alabama actor, received his early education at home under the tutelage of an aunt, Miss Miliene Mallory, and later under another aunt, Mrs. W. W. Wallace. He attended Howard College one year. In September, 1900, he went to New York and after three days there began working as a super-member of the Murray Hill Stock Company. Later he played for three seasons on the road in "Under Southern Skies." Following this engagement, he went with Henry Miller and Margaret Anglin for four years and played with them in "The Great Divide," and "The Faith Healer." In 1898 when the United States went to war with Spain, he volunteered and served as a private soldier in Co. G, 1st Alabama. After the cessation of hostilities

he went to England with Mr. Miller in the production of "The Great Divide." On his return to the States in 1910, he entered the motion picture field with David Wark Griffith. Among his screen successes are "The Birth of a Nation," in which he played the part of the "Little Colonel;" "The Avenging Conscience;" Ibsen's "Ghosts;" and Edgar Allen Poe's "The Raven."
